Peace Talks Fail, Mediation Board Gets Coal Strike

Miss Perkins Acts After Southern Operators Bolt N. Y. Conference

Lewis Is Defied

Secretary of Labor Perkins early today certified the Nation-wide soft coal dispute to the National Defense Mediation Board.

Her action was taken after the mines had been shut down for 23 days and defense industries were beginning to feel the pinch of fuel shortages, while 400,000 miners remained idle and operators and union heads negotiated vainly for a settlement.

The secretary announced the certification a few minutes after receiving word of the collapse of renewed conferences in New York, brought about by President Roosevelt's Monday night plea that the mines be reopened at once, with negotiations to continue while the men were at work.

Southerners Dissent

Southern coal operators, vigorously resisting proposed elimination of a 40-cents-a-day wage differential in their favor, had refused to sign a $7-a-day wage contract which had been accepted by the Northern Appalachian operators. The Southerners declared they wished to get the controversy before the Mediation Board.

The Labor Secretary then issued a statement saying:

"Continued disagreement among groups of coal operators and the miners with conferences breaking up last night after every opportunity had been afforded the disputants to reach an accord by the usual conciliation methods makes it necessary to certify the entire wage dispute in the bituminous coal industry to the National Defense Mediation Board.

"It is now clear that the Southern operators have withdrawn from negotiations and declined to agree to the President's proposal to reopen the mines.

Acts Despite Lewis

"The Northern operators accepted the proposal and the United Mine Workers Union accepted it, but in each case the acceptance was contingent on all the mines reopening.

"Certification of the case to the board was postponed so as to give all parties concerned every oppor-

Riot at Rally

Crowd Beats Lindbergh's Detractors

By the Associated Press

New York, April 23.—Rioting broke out tonight outside Manhattan Center shortly before Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was to address a rally of the America First Committee.

Men and women were kicked and beaten and several were knocked unconscious when about 100 of them appeared bearing signs denouncing Lindbergh. They were attacked by the crowd.

When the placard-bearers approached the dense throng, estimated at 15,000, outside the auditorium, cries went up: "Get out of here or we'll kill you."

The pickets hoisted their placards higher and the fighting started.

Lindbergh declared in his address that the United States "cannot win this war for England, regardless of how much assistance we extend."

Branding American interventionists as "the real defeatists, for their policy has led to the defeat of every country that followed their advice," Lindbergh declared that the British "hope they may be able to persuade us to send another expeditionary force to Europe and to share with England militarily, as well as finan-

Modified Tax Plan Offered To Committee

Alternative Bill Would Ease Levies On Middle Incomes

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A modified income tax plan, revising downward the Treasury's proposed stiff surtax rates on middle and lower middle class incomes, yesterday was before the House Ways and Means Committee.

The alternate proposal, starting surtaxes at 6 per cent after a flat $2,000 exemption, was prepared by staff experts of the Congressional Joint Committee on Internal Revenue.

Where the Treasury proposed surtaxes beginning at 11 per cent, after existing deductions and exemptions, the Congressional staff would tax lightest where the Treasury hit hardest—on taxable incomes up to $20,000.

Yields from surtaxes some $500,000,000 lighter than the Treasury proposed would be made up mainly by broadening the Treasury's list of proposed excise taxes, it was indicated.

Morgenthau to Testify

Ways and Means committeemen meanwhile awaited further light on the Tresury's comprehensive plan for raising $3,600,000,000. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau will appear before the group this morning in the first official public revelation of the plan. Pending his testimony the committee still held on the badly jostled secrecy lid.

Declining to discuss either Treasury or joint committee proposals, Chairman Doughton repeated that his committee will write its own tax bill after hearings. He said it was unnecessary to alarm the public

Order Puts 125,000 Into Civil Service

Takes Effect Jan. 1, But Vacancies After June 30 Must Be Filled From Merit List

By Jerry Kluttz

President Roosevelt late yesterday virtually eliminated the patronage system when he signed an Executive order that will make the Ramspeck Act effective and bring under Civil Service the jobs of more than 125,000 Federal employes.

Thousands of lawyers, administrators, G-men, scientists and clerks, whose jobs were heretofore exempted, will be brought under the merit system by the President's order.

The President described his order as a "signicant milestone in civil service reform." He went on to say that for the "first time in the history of this Government, the greatest possible opportunities are now open for the development of a broad merit system which will further encourage men and women of outstanding ability to enter the Government under conditions which will offer them fair and equal opportunities to build satisfactory careers."

Few Exemptions

Persons who are appointed to non-Civil Service jobs before July 1 can benefit under the order. On July 1 the thousands of jobs will be brought under Civil Service, but noncompetitive mental and physical tests, required under the act, won't be given until after January 1, 1942.

Between July 1 and January 1 all vacancies must be filled from Civil Service registers or the Civil Service Commission must approve the appointees. During that six-month period the Civil Service Commission will consult with each agency and exempt from its requirements "some positions of a policy-making character." The President explained that there would be "very few" positions exempted.

The only controversial provision in the President's order was the method set forth for bringing lawyers under civil service. The President made effective the so-called Frankfurter, or Plan A. The plan had been under fire by some civil service advocates as one that would lead to favoritism and discrimination. Chairman Robert Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee and author of the act is known to have been opposed to Plan A.

"Must Shut Out Favoritism"

However, the President, in approving Plan A, said that "we must shut out considerations of caprice or favoritism or worse in the selection of our law officers."

Briefly, Plan A calls for the creation of a Board of Legal Examiners made up of five Government general counsels, two law professors and two private attorneys appointed by the President but without compensation. The Solicitor General and principal legal examiner of the Civil Service Commission, Jack Cannon, would serve as ex-officio members. This board, after consultation with the Civil Service Commission, would recruit and examine, promote and transfer Federal attorneys.

Legal examinations would be given annually. Eligible lists would be kept "alive" only a year. Registers would be "unranked," which would permit an agency to select any attorney on the register. Veterans, however, could be placed at the top of registers. This latter provision is what stirred up the controversy as all Civil Service registers are ranked as to grade.

The Presidential order has few exemptions. The act itself exempted approximately 21,000 WPA administrative employes, 19,000 TVA

250,000 Greeks Prisoners, Berlin Claims; Italians Hail Victory as 'Lesson' to U. S.

Rest of Hellenic Troops Fight On; King, Cabinet Flee to Crete

By the Associated Press

Athens, April 23.—British and Greek troops fought desperately and unequally against the German steamroller north of Athens tonight after the entire northwest Greek armies collapsed and King George II and his government hastily abandoned Athens for the Island of Crete.

British and Greek headquarters reported intact their vastly outnumbered troops who had been holding Thermopylae Pass and the Lokris Mountains 100 miles to the north, but their exact disposition was not revealed. These soldiers apparently had these choices:

To fight and die on the spot; withdraw slowly to southern embarkation ports, or retreat into southwestern Greece, the Peloponnesus area.

Piraeus Bombed Repeatedly

Swarms of German planes attacked Piraeus and nearby areas, and the ministry of home security acknowledged that "considerable" damage was done to ships and other objectives. Three German bombers were shot down by Greek antiaircraft fire, and a fourth plane made a forced landing on an island in the Aegean.

Air raid alarms in Athens became so commonplace that Athenians paid no more attention to them and went about their business as usual.

King George and Greek Premier Emmanuel Tsouderos announced to the people the news of the government's flight to Crete and Greek intentions to carry on the struggle "with all the remaining forces with a view to securing the supreme national interests."

King Predicts Final Victory

Capitulation of the army of Epirus, which threw the Italians out of Greece into Albania last fall, was done without the government's knowledge, the King told the people.

The collapse of that formidable force, the Greek premier said, apparently was "precipitated by exhaustion."

Calling on the people to figh. on, and to endure, Tsouderos proclaimed:

"We are defending ourselves against an unfair aggression, but also against the unprecedented infamy on the part of an empire of 100,000,000 (Germany) which struck us from the back in order to save its cowardly colleague and partner

The Army of the United States was complimented by its chief of staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, last night as having "the highest morale of any military group I have ever seen."

By June, he told a session of the annual convention of the American Red Cross in Constitution Hall, "these men will emerge as a great Army in the field."

To the Red Cross goes much of the credit for building the Army's morale, he said. Admiral C. W. Nimitz, chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the United States Navy, also praised the American Red Cross for its morale building influence on this country's Naval men.

Both officers spoke at a session devoted to the theme of Red Cross

Special Police Detail Created To Curb Growing D. C. Vice

By John Singerhoff
Post Staff Writer

In an effort to curb increased prostitution, Maj. Ernest W. Brown yesterday ordered two detective sergeants on extraordinary detail to supplement the vice squad.

Sergts. Roy Blick and Harold Hodge, both of the pickup squad, were named and given free reign to work in any section of the city.

Both formerly were detailed to vice work in the First and Second Precincts when they were precinct detectives. Both were promoted several months ago and were relieved of the vice work assignment at that time.

Maj. Brown said numerous complaints have been made about women molesting men, especially in the downtown area. He said one Government employe, a woman, had written to him at his home complaining that she had been accosted downtown at night by men because she was forced to walk through a section frequented by prostitutes.

A recent survey of vice conditions in Washington revealed that more than 2,000 known prostitutes are engaged here, with houses in every section of the city.

The survey disclosed an apparently new setup employed by the women to escape the disorderly

Rome Already Envisions Big Territorial Gains in Balkans

By the Associated Press

Rome, April 23.—Encircled Greek armies in the Epirus and Macedonia sectors of Greece became Axis prisoners of war tonight and all their arms, war materials and landing fields went to German and Italian armies as spoils of war.

The unconditional surrender agreed to by Greek officers in the field earlier today became effective at 6 p. m., and Italy's newspapers immediately hailed the collapse of the Greek armies as a "lesson to America."

Italy envisioned important territorial gains in the Balkans and looked forward to the next thrust of the Axis armies—probably in Egypt.

Instead of allowing the surrendering Greeks to return home, the men and officers will be treated as prisoners of war, to be kept in concentration camps pending conclusion of military operations on continental Greece and the Ionian Islands.

Then, the surrender terms said, the liberation of all officers, subofficers and men will be taken under consideration.

The Greek officers were allowed to retain their swords in recognition, the terms said, of the "courage shown by Greek troops on the battlefield."

Italy Points a Moral

The Greek officers will continue command of their men. The Greek command will be responsible for the provisions and sanitary supplies of the prisoners and must guide ships in captured ports.

Il Giornale D'Italia presented last night's surrender in Epirus and Macedonia as a lesson to nations regarding Italy as a country of easy victories.

"Once more British warmongering has committed an error in calculation," the paper said. "And there is still somebody on the other side of the ocean who is founding and building its warmongering on the cardboard victories of British propaganda."

Dispatches said a colonel of the Greek general staff and two other Greek officers carrying a white flag appeared last night before the Italian front line and asked to be taken to the Italian commander.

Signed Near Salonika

Conducted to the commander of the Ninth Army, they told him the Greek high command wanted to surrender its two armies in western and northern Greece, where they were surrounded. The Italian commander quickly drafted the text of an unconditional surrender, which the Greek emissary signed.

[The ceremony occurred in a mountain villa just outside Salonika which has served as the headquarters of Field Marshal Gen. Von List, commander of the German Balkan blitzkrieg, a United Press dispatch said.

[Signing for Germany was Artillery Gen. Jodl, Lieut. Gen. Ferrero for Italy and the commander in chief of the Greek armies in Epirus and Macedonia, Gen. Tsolakoglu.

Nazis Seek Turk Straits, London Says

By the United Press

London (Thursday), April 24.—Unconfirmed reports circulated in foreign diplomatic circles today that Germany had demanded that Turkey surrender complete military control of the Dardanelles and Bosporus.

The Nazis were said to have offered Turkey a slice of Grecian Thrace, the long finger of Greek soil jutting up against the frontier of European Turkey, in exchange for control of the bottleneck to the Black Sea.

Turkey was represented as having been pressed for an immediate reply, with at least a tacit implication of retaliatory action if the response ran counter to German expectations.

The diplomatic reports were that when Russia learned of the German demand on Turkey, Moscow suggested to Berlin that Germany and the Soviet Union share the control of the Straits. Germany was said to have rejected the overture.

[Military experts said that if the

British Regain The Initiative In North Africa

447 Italians Taken In Sortie by Troops Defending Tobruk

By Harold Denny
Copyright by New York Times

With The British Army in North Africa, April 23.—The British now hold the initiative in the Libyan campaign firmly in their own hands, both in the air and on the ground.

They have proved this again in the last two days with repeated successful plane attacks on Axis convoys in the harbor of Bengasi and two more daring sorties from the beleaguered post of Tobruk.

The Tobruk sorties were on a scale similar to earlier such adventures. Exuberant Australians slipped out of their own fortifications surrounding the land side of the town on the night of April 21-22 in buses, pouncing on the Italian posts. Suffering few casualties, they captured 17 Italian officers and 430 men. They also destroyed a field fun.

These new captures bring the total in the Tobruk area since the siege started to well over 2,000.

Tobruk is the scene of daily air battles, Axis aircraft pounding the town and port hard and Royal Air Force fighters trying to protect the garrison. R. A. F. fighters intercepted a much larger force of Axis planes over Tobruk yesterday and shot down four planes and badly damaged others.

R. A. F. bombers and fighters continued attacking Axis troop concentrations and road convoys throughout yesterday and last night. Finding a long German motor transport column on the road, fighter planes dived down and machine-gunned the trucks, causing in the opinion of the pilots, heavy casualties. Before dawn yesterday R. A. F. planes rained heavy bombs on Bengasi har-

'It Is the Last Act'

By the Associated Press

Berlin, April 23.—Germany's military spokesman announced tonight the virtual conquest of Greece, claiming the surrender of Hellenic armies of a quarter of a million and the annihilation of a British rearguard at Thermopylae, gateway to Athens.

The Wehrmacht — literally armed forces—was reported in Berlin to be approaching Athens after breaking through the pass where the Spartans of Leonidas perished to the last man.

(One Italian report said the Germans were within 35 miles of Athens when the British began mass embarkations, abandoning heaps of materiel.)

Hopes to Spare Athens

There were indications here that the Germans hoped to take the Greek capital by total capitulation or armistice, and to spare it from bombardment. It is being said in Berlin that much of Athens' modern architectural beauty was due to the German architect, Schaubert.

However, the air force late today was pounding Piraeus, Athens' port, to halt British withdrawals by sea.

A correspondent asked authorities this evening:

"Has Athens fallen?" The answer was:

"At this moment we do not know. Military developments are faster than the information service coming to Berlin."

But, the spokesman added, both Athens and Piraeus now have lost virtually all military value for the Allies.

Soon after German sources had announced the surrender of from 16 to 18 divisions of the armies of Epirus and Macedonia, one military spokesman said:

"It is the last act; the conquest of all Greece is practically effected."

British Transports Sunk

British losses in this "pell mell retreat," the spokesman declared, already are approaching those of Dunkerque. Stukas continue to hammer all remaining roads of escape and are swarming on those harbors left to the British.

Germans said a conservative estimate showed that 152,000 tons of British ships already had been sunk off the harbors of Greece—among them transports fully loaded with

The views of a dozen organizations were aired before a Senate subcommittee conducting hearings on the Capper-Sumners suffrage resolution and with virtual unanimity the witnesses agreed that the unusual position of Washington as the seat of Federal Government should constitute no prohibition to franchise.

The resolution proposes to amend the Federal Constitution to authorize Congress to delegate self-governing powers to a city government and to permit Washington residents to vote for representatives in Congress and Presidential electors.

Appearing in behalf of the newspapers were Merlo J. Pusey of The Washington Post; Jesse C. Suter, Star, and Frank C. Waldrop, Times-Herald.

To their support of the resolution were added indorsements from Mrs. Harris Baldwin, National League of Women Voters; Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, who was granted permission to file statements from five organizations; Mrs. Joseph Low, Voteless District of Columbia League of

Britons Geared For Bad News, May Be Critical

By the Associated Press

London, April 23.—Britain waited almost with resignation tonight for some definite word from her army in Greece.

Even the worst news would hardly come as a surprise, but there were indications that both press and public were likely to be in a highly critical mood when the whole picture should become available.

The only official announcement about the current situation today was the lone sentence in a Cairo general headquarters communique:

"Empire forces are consolidating their new defensive positions."

The ominous uncertainty surrounding the newest Balkan developments was reflected in the declaration of authoritative sources commenting on the reported surrender of a portion of the Greek army that to the "best of our knowledge this does not mean our defense line has been broken."

The same sources, however, contributed nothing cheerful to the news with the added comment that "as far as we know some Greek troops are still fighting and our forces also. There has been no word of our evacuating Greece."

They said they knew the east end of the Allied defense lines were somewhere south of Lamia but could not disclose whence the lines extended from there.

Panzer Drive Slackens

There was some comfort for the British in reports that the terrific impact of Nazi panzer forces was slackening somewhat, possibly as a result of the aerial bombardment of their communication lines and also heavy losses suffered during the prolonged and unrelenting drive.

Reuters, British news agency, said in a Cairo dispatch that the temporary easing of German pressure had aided the British in consolidating their new positions.

Prime Minister Churchill was received in audience at Buckingham Palace and was understood to have given King George a full account of the increasingly critical war developments.

Heretofore most of the British press has been inclined to avoid the slightest criticism of the conduct of the Balkan campaign but a growing impatience with the current lack of information is noticeable.

The Evening News said:

"It must be said that people in this country are puzzled. They are no more dismayed than they were in even blacker days after the fall of France, but they are asking questions. They agree with Churchill that the answers must wait until these battles for other people are concerned as well, but at the proper time they will want answers."

Prime Minister Robert G. Menzies of Australia, who has been on a European tour for several weeks, declared in a radio address to Australia:

"To desert the Greeks just as the Germans were about to attack them would have been one of the infamies of history.

Prospects of Military Success

"After anxious consideration . . . we all came to the conclusion that, though assisting Greece with soldiers was a hazardous undertaking, it was one which had some real prospects of military success.

"Who could contemplate that the great British Empire should encourage and cheer the Greeks in their resistance to Italian aggression and then leave them with a shrug of the shoulders when the German aggressor came along? . . .

"The stark, brutal truth is that we cannot win the war without losses, and, by the last analysis, the only means of winning is by killing Germans."

Australasians constitute a large part of the British imperial forces in Greece.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden declared in Parliament that King Peter of Yugoslavia had established his government in the Middle East and the Yugoslavs would continue as allies of Britain.

The Daily Mail in an editorial headed "Too Late" said today Eden was given the task of consolidating Turkey, Yugoslavia and Greece but "failed in his mission."

"That is the criticism now—not that we should have withheld support from Greece but that our effort, both diplomatic and military, was too feeble, too late."

reported demands were verified, they would explain the reported German troop landings on the islands of Samothrake and Lemnos off the mouth of the Dardanelles.

[An International News Service dispatch from Istanbul said it was reported last night that the Germans had occupied two more islands in the Aegean—Thasos, about 100 miles northwest of the Dardanelles, and Skyros, 100 miles southwest.]

[The United Press said the official Turkish radio reported without confirmation that German troops had seized the island of Lemnos in the Aegan, less than 50 miles from the mouth of the Dardanelles.]

Turks Stand Firm

Istanbul, April 23 (AP).—Turkey prepared tonight for any eventuality, guarding against any attack from the Axis even though it was declared that such a development was not expected at present.

There was no official comment on reports that Germans have seized Greek islands close to Turkey, but officials in Ankara said their policy still is peace if possible and war if Turkey's independence is threatened.

Foreign circles here held that the ambitions of Bulgaria are the determining factor in the Turkish attitude. They agreed that Turkey would fight rather than surrender any territory to give Bulgaria an outlet to the Aegean Sea and would not give up control of the Bosporus and Dardanelles Straits even if confronted by a German ultimatum.

Turkey was believed by foreigners to be in close touch with Russia on the ominous Near Eastern situation.

armies and "recognizing the braveness of the Greek soldiers."

[Gen. Ferrero made a similar speech, it was stated, whereafter the Greek commander expressed thanks in the name of his surrendered troops.]

Italy Asks Territory

Count Ciano, the foreign minister, was believed to have discussed territorial gains with Chancellor Hitler on his recent trip to Vienna. It is indicated that Italy will ask for all of Dalmatia and Montenegro and as much of western Greece as can be annexed to Albania. An Italian commission already is reorganizing the administration in Dalmatia.

Il Giornale d'Italia's correspondent wrote that British troops began to embark from various Greek ports when the German approached within 35 miles of Athens, abandoning immense quantities of materials.

The Greek armies that surrendered, Il Giornale said, did so only after a desperate battle at Perati Bridge, in which four Greek divisions virtually were destroyed. Two regiments of the Evzones were wiped out almost to a man, the dispatch said, and a single Greek battalion had 500 dead.

The encircling movement which dealt a death blow on the flank of the Greeks was said to have been carried out by an Italian division which made a difficult march through the mountains over mule paths at altitudes of more than 3,000 feet. The paper paid tribute to the "gallantry, courage and abnegation of the Italian soldier."

Woman Bombed Twice Tells King She'll 'Stick It'

London, April 23 (AP).—Touring London's bomb-scarred East End today the King and Queen were told by a woman with a shawl over her head:

"I have been bombed out twice and I am waiting now to be bombed out again, but I shall stick it."

That's the spirit," said the King, shaking her hand warmly.

The Queen stooped and picked up the picture and gazed at it pensively for some minutes.

British Praise Palestine Troops

Jerusalem, April 23.—How Palestinian troops played a vitally important part during the British advance in Eritrea, helping to take between 1,200 and 2,000 prisoners and assisting in bringing to a successful conclusion an extremely difficult and courageous action, has now been revealed by war correspondents returning from Khartoum.

Most Palestinian casualities were light and none of the troops fell into enemy hands. General Platt, commanding the operations, expressed the highest opinion of these Jewish and Arab fighting men for the bravery they showed in advancing in small self-contained parties over a wide front for a period of about three weeks.

"From the endurances of this hard struggle against our race, which is disapproved by all those who are morally superior and by free peoples of the world, who have expressed their disgust, we shall come out victorious, glorious and large."

King George declared the "hard destinies of war compel us to get away from Athens," but said the national will was "resistance to the end on the part of Greek troops."

"The right of our struggle and God," the monarch said, "will help us to secure by all means a final victory in spite of the trials, pains and dangers which we shall go through. . . . Have courage—good days will come again. Long live the nation."

Athens Radio Still Operating

New York (Thursday), April 24 (AP).—The Athens raido was still sending normal commercial and government messages at midnight—7 a. m., Athens time.

Latest German and Italian reports have indicated the Axis troops were drawing nearer almost hourly to the Greek capital but the Axis threat thus far has caused no interruption of the regular work of the Athens raido station.

British troops.

Moreover, commentators insisted the Luftwaffe is tenaciously pursuing those ships which have gotten away toward Africa and "we are getting them."

In addition to ships sunk, it was stated that 37 were damaged extensively and many of them put in a foundering condition. The high command claimed that seven British ships of 37,000 tons were sunk Tuesday in Greek waters, a dozen others damaged by bombs and a big British warship hit in Crete's Suda Bay.

The German press published a story that King George II of Greece, with British authorities, had fled Athens aboard two destroyers bound for Crete, where it was said the Greek Crown Prince Paul has been "a British captive" for some days.

ernment to take over the protection of that Danish colony appear to fit into a general plan to relieve the British shipping emergency.

Mayor LaGuardia's statement, made yesterday in a speech in Ottawa, was believed here to mean that the United States would establish a Naval and perhaps air patrol of the Atlantic waters extending out to the limits of the Western Hemisphere, which includes Greenland.

Although this patrol was not expected to be strictly an American convoy of British supply ships, it would tend to serve an identical purpose in keeping German submarines away from the convoy routes. British naval vessels could take up the convoy service at a point about midway across the Atlantic.

LaGuardia Hints At U. S. Convoys

By the Associated Press

Ottawa, April 23.—Defense of North American waters up to 1,000 miles off the Canadian and United States coasts both in the Atlantic and Pacific is provided in plans of the United States-Canada permanent joint defense board, the American chairman, Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, declared here today.

The Canadian Press said some dominion quarters tied this in with an earlier remark by LaGuardia to interpret it as a forecast of United States convoy duty half way across the Atlantic.

As he arrived to address a St. George's day luncheon of the Canadian Club and Canadian Federation of Mayors, LaGuardia was asked if he could give any indication of how far the United States would go in convoying war supplies bound for England.

"Watch my speech today," he replied, according to Canadian press. "There will be a line in it that will give you the whole answer."

Then LaGuardia, who flew to Ottawa this morning after meeting President Roosevelt in Washington yesterday and flew back to New York this afternoon, informed the luncheon:

"Off-shore defense, as we understand it, is to defend our shores at three hours' distance from the farthest point of either the Canadian or the United States coast."

"And when I say three hours I mean three hours by airplane doing 333 miles an hour. That is our St. George's day message to the people of England."

The Canadian Press said La Guardia would not amplify the statement but emphasized later that the "333 miles an hour" was "very important."

He would not say specifically whether the limit might be measured from Newfoundland, where the United States has a defense base less than 2,000 miles from the Irish coast, but he said the Atlantic Coast limit would be fixed from "the most eastern point at which we have bases."

The mayor stressed that defense not only meant the North American coasts but "off-shore defense as well."

British Forces Regain Initiative In North Africa

bor, striking both moles, scoring a direct hit on one ship and damaging other craft.

It is difficult to see how the Axis forces can resume their drive toward Egypt along the North African coast without heavy reinforcements of men and material, and to bring them up would be a tremendous task.

It is equally difficult to see how the Axis can advance eastward in force so long as Tobruk remains in British hands. Tobruk, which is the best natural harbor along the Libyan coast and which can be supplied from the sea, is a strong bastion from which British forces could raid southward over open ground and constantly menace communications, and that is the reason the British are holding it so stubbornly and the Germans and Italians are attacking it so determindedly.

With Tobruk still holding out, Axis forces are limited to Tripoli and Bengasi for seaborne supplies and it is problematic how much can get in by air. Other smaller ports, such as Derna, which is blocked by a sunken ship, and Apollonia, with few facilities, are of little value to the Axis.

The Germans and Italians only recently began using Bengasi which R. A. F. bombers are now trying to render unusable.

Tripoli is the main avenue whereby supplies and reinforcements are reaching North Africa. Considerable supplies must have been shipped at night across the narrow stretch of the Mediterranean and events of the last few days show how anxious the British are to close that door. The destruction of a whole Italian convoy by the British navy between Sicily and Tripoli last week and bombardment of the port of Tripoli and the ships in it on Monday by British warships and planes was heartening news to British troops.

Even if Tripoli cannot be closed, the British believe Tripoli cannot solve the Axis problem. Supplies from Tripoli must come in hundreds of miles by the road—though a good one—skirting the coast which is always subject to interruption through air attack, shelling from warships and even raids by landing parties. It is calculated that thousands of trucks are needed to supply the Germans and Italians now engaging the British.

The havoc which persistent air attack can visit on motor transport is illustrated by a fact attested to by high aviation officers here. One German supply column in the vicinity of Bardia has been pounded so hard from the air it is partly immobilized and has been forced to disperse its vehicles 800 yards apart, making command almost impossible.

Fighting Going On Around Salum

Cairo, April 23 (AP).—A considerable small-scale British offensive is in progress around Salum, furthest point of the Axis advance just inside Egypt, it was revealed today.

Countering previous Italian claims, the British announced that a raiding party landed at Bardia, Libya, last Saturday night, destroyed important objectives and reembarked with the loss of only 60 men captured.

Whereas the Italians reported that the landing had been frustrated, the British claimed to have dynamited an important bridge, left a dump of valuable stores burning fiercely and rendered four defense guns useless. The "major part" of the raiding party was declared to have returned to its base.

Bardia, near the Egyptian border, is about 75 miles east of Tobruk.

London, April 23 (INS).—The 16,644-ton British armed merchant cruiser H. M. S. Rajputana has been torpedoed and sunk, the admiralty announced tonight.

Built in 1926, the Rajputana was a sister hip of the former crack liner Peninsula and the Orient liner Rawalpindi, which was converted into an auxiliary cruiser shortly after the outbreak of the war.

"We greatly deplore the destruction of splendid aircraft so suitable for our purpose, but the disappointment is somewhat dissipated by our knowledge that the flow of aircraft from the U. S. A. now is increasing with such rapidity that we shall certainly reach one day the supply I was authorized by the U. S. A. to promise six months ago."

Beaverbrook's statement preceded a secret session at which he gave fuller information on detailed points raised in connection with American airplane supplies.

"We've already had immense American deliveries," he said in the open session. "Many of these American machines are in operational use—very many. We've handed over to the Royal Air Force nearly 1,000 assembled American and Canadian aircraft, including the Canadian Hurricane.

"That's a very large addition to our equipment and I say with full authority that they're very fine machines ready to fly and fight."

Defends "Scatter" Policy

The minister also said the admiralty had informed him of the arrival in the last few days of 95 aircraft by sea, 355 tons of airplane parts and 1,326 engines, "a first-rate consignment."

Beaverbrook listed among American planes the Liberator, which he said he and United States Ambassador John G. Winant watched arrive recently; the Tomahawk, Glen Martin bomber, Brewster Buffalo and the Hudson.

He described the Liberator as a large plane, faster than Britain's famous Stirling and greater in bomb capacity.

He defended dispersal of airplane plants over the country, a move he conceded that had hampered production, had been costly and had brought criticism.

"The system had very satisfactory success," he said "The bombings—you've heard the German wireless tell of our 'immense losses in aircraft and aircraft production'—have turned out to be nothing at all because our aircraft production had gone away and we were out of the bombed area altogether."

Urges More Drive

He said a Mr. Martin, whom he described as a former American citizen now a British subject, had volunteered as controller of fabrication for fighter output and "our position now is somewhat improved."

The lag in providing equipment, Lord Beaverbrook continued, "can be cured by more drive and energy."

"We must step up production as fast as we can. We must never let help from abroad—help from America for which we are so grateful—drive us from the main purpose."

The biggest bomb ever flung from an airplane, Beaverbrook said, was dropped by Squadron Leader R. H. Garner on Emden, Germany, and within an hour Garner "was describing his experiences in technical terms."

Australians Ask 'Inquest' in War in Greece

By the Associated Press

Sydney, Australia, April 23.—Australia's Advisory War Council discussed in secret session today the crisis growing out of developments in Greece, developments which brought mounting criticism from labor.

Before the session opened the council's labor members said they would insist on a "full inquest" into the Greek expedition in which Australian troops participated. After the day's discussion, however, no statement was issued by the council.

Labor Party leaders said today that a meeting of the party's executive committee was unlikely. This announcement was interpreted as a probable rejection of a proposal for a national war government urged by Prime Minister Menzies in London yesterday.

Parliament Called

Political circles also saw in the statement the likelihood of a Labor Party attack on the government at a special session of Parliament called for May to examine the war situation.

H. E. Holt, minister of labor and national service, declared Australia's war effort "will fall tragically short of its best until our strongest national government is formed."

He also criticized the war council, declaring that "despite strenuous labor efforts, highly important cabinet decisions were delayed weeks, even months, because of the shuttling back and forth between cabinet and council.

On the other hand, navy minister W. M. Hughes contended that "the position is not as bad as after the collapse of France . . . The Germans are going on, but how near are they to stopping?"

He referred to the German army's ever-lengthening lines of communication.

The Sydney Daily Telegraph said Australians even now will find it hard to believe the government sanctioned participation of Australian troops in the Greek "adventure" without British assurance that "our troops were adequately supported."

Australian Second to Wavell

Australian Envoy Warns Japanese

By the Associated Press

New York, April 23.—In an implied warning to Japan, Richard G. Casey, Australian minister, said tonight that his own country and neighboring New Zealand would fight bitterly for their freedom "if the dark forces of aggression venture to spread into the peaceful waters of the Pacific."

These far-off British dominions, Casey said in a speech prepared for the Australian and New Zealand Societies of New York, are of "greater significance than is normally realized in this country."

'One Terrible Phase'

Apart from their strategic significance and their resources, Casey stressed the importance to the United States in having "these two great outposts of democratic civilization . . . who, if necessary, will join hands in selling their freedom dearly . . ."

He said further:

"In looking back over the tragic history of the last two years, I believe that one terrible phrase might well be inscribed over the temporary tombs of all the small countries that have been overrun one by one by the Nazi terror. I speak of the fateful words 'It can't happen here!'

"March of Barbarians"

"It is an almost elemental and instinctive feeling in the human breast that, although tragedies may come to others, 'I' will escape. It springs to the mind when our neighbor's house is burned down—it sustains the soldier in war when the man next to him is hit. It dulls the imagination and lulls one into a false sense of security. It militates against the acceptance of the more sensible slogan—'United we stand, divided we fall.'

"I am proud to say that, although we in Australia and New Zealand were very remote geographically from the center of the storm—although we might possibly have been excused had we held back from the actual struggle—we never succumbed to the fatal error of believing that we could be immune from the evil effects of the march of the barbarians."

Tripoli Attack Heaviest of Kind In Naval History, Witness Says

By Larry Allen

Associated Press Staff Writer

With the British Battle Fleet Bombarding Tripoli (Monday), April 21 (delayed).—Battleships, cruisers and destroyers of this fleet fired more than 1,000 tons of high-explosive shells into Tripoli before dawn today in a vastly destructive bombardment which caught the Germans and Italians so unaware that they first mistook it for an air raid.

Fleet officers said this was the heaviest assault of its sort in naval history; certainly it was among the most spectacular. They described as "highly effective" the attack on the last strong Italian base in Africa.

Officers declared this base was so heavily hit and had so many wrecked ships in harbor that it would be difficult to use it as a headquarters from which to send Axis reinforcements to the army pressing against Egypt.

For 42 minutes the 15-inch, 6-inch and 4.5-inch shells roared over the old Moorish walls, crushing buildings like eggshells, striking seven Axis ships which were severely damaged and possibly sunk, setting fire to the railroad station, the power plant, underground oil depots, naval headquarters and piers. Casualties must have been heavy ashore. The British suffered neither damage nor casualties.

The German-Italian error of believing this was an air raid was understandable, for the naval attack was ushered in by a 90-minute bombing by waves of R. A. F. planes.

Aboard the most powerful battleship in the Mediterranean fleet, I stood on the signal deck and then on an emergency conning tower, watching the heavy anti-aircraft guns of Tripoli belch flame in trying to drive off the bombers.

Thousands of splinters of fire seemed to sear the velvety, starlit skies. "Flaming onions" slithered upward to burst in red, blue, green and white flame.

A single searchlight reached up to try to spot the British planes while scores of heavy bombs exploded hoarsely and with white flashes along the Tripoli harborline. Fires sprang up. Some of the ground guns fell silent.

The bombers gave Tripoli one last dose of explosives, then released countless incendiary bombs and flares and flew away.

While all this was going on, the fleet, its units shadowy and mysterious against the background of the predawn darkness, maneuvered quietly through calm seas and around mine networks until it reached point-blank range.

"We shall open fire at any moment," the battleship commander told me.

Suddenly, at just 5 a. m., there was a mighty flash of yellow flame from the 15-inch rifles of the adjoining flagship. Shells seemed to leave all eight of the big guns simultaneously, to burst on the fort barracks and warehouses ashore.

A few seconds later the guns of this ship roared similarly as the vessel shuddered and jerked. My eyes cleared just in time to catch the flashes of the 15-inch guns.

Over the city, the fleet air arm hurled more flares to maintain the illumination started by the flares and fires of the R. A. F.

For 20 minutes the naval bombardment continued, the warships constantly shifting position as they steamed past the harbor.

Then the whole fleet executed a turn and returned to rake the port again.

Despite the huge smoke pall that hung over Tripoli, the spotters kept up a running report, like this:

"A number of salvos fell on Spanish quay. Three ships at anchor and three at the naval base hit. Black smoke obscuring spotting.

"Fifteen-inch salvos hit railway station, Marshaling (freight) yards, power stations; they are masses of flames, many war stores fired.

"Karamandi Mole heavily hit. One destroyer hit. Three huge explosions in oil depots. Shells demolished naval headquarters."

Lighter warships pumped six-inch shells into the shore batteries.

In all, three battleships had fired at least 300 tons of shells each, and the other units contributed more than 100 tons for a total of well over 1,000.

Forty-two minutes after the shelling began, the second sweep past the harbor was completed and the commander in chief ordered, "Cease fire."

Quietly the fleet steamed away toward its eastern base, while a lone shore gun continued to fire angrily.

'Pilot' Is Called Britain's Most Honored Title

By J. Reagan McCrary

International News Special Service Writer

New York, April 23.—"Pilot—that is the nation's most honored title today. Not earl or marquis or lord or knight. But pilot. Praise them. Pray for their glorious survival..."

Those are the words of Lord Beaverbrook, called "The Beaver," the little Canada-born minister of aircraft production, who has severed all connections with his two papers, the London Daily Express, circulation 2,600,000, and the Evening Standard, afternoon tabloid.

Lord Beaverbrook's own title was impishly borrowed from the name of a tiny village in northern Ontario, near the the place where he was born, a tinier village named Vaugh.

He takes far more pride in his son's title: Wing Commander Max Aitken, D. F. C., night fighter squadron leader of the Royal Air Force.

No man never had a sterner check on the fruits of his labor than Beaverbrook. He loves his son more than wealth, honor or life itself. And the son flies the planes that the father builds.

I never knew Lord Beaverbrook before I flew to England last January; but today I know him well.

Friend of Runyon

The Beaver is the man who gave me the green light for the bomber trip to Mritain. (Editor's note: McCrary flew to Britain on an American bomber being delivered to the R. A. F.). A dozen big shots put pressure on him to get me the trip, and the Beaver told me after I landed:

"I wouldn't raise a finger for you until I got a cable from Damon Runyon. That was too much."

You know a lot about the Beaver when you know that the best friend in America is Damon Runyon.

Churchill and Beaverbrook have bickered like boys for 30 years. In the general strike in 1926 that shut down most newspapers in England, only two kept coming out: Beaverbrook's Express and Churchill's Special Gazette, published to report government activities.

They had a handful of linotypers between them; they fought as hard over who would get priority for those men as they have ever fought over issues of gravest importance to the empire. They're like that.

"Preached for Years"

As minister of aircraft production today, Beaverbrook's record of performance is on the books. I know the figures; not from him. I can't give them out without helping Adolf Hitler.

But this much can be reported: Under Beaverbrook, production of aircraft in the empire has risen until it is ten times the production of first-line combat aircraft in America. Even from Canada, Beaverbrook has squeezed more than 300 Hurricanes since January 1.

Most of his newspaper colleagues write and talk about what ought to be done; Beaverbrook has performed what he preached about.

Finally, on the Sunday I left London to catch a Dutch plane to Portugal, I decided to take the bull by the horns. I phoned the Beaver—he's about the only top man you'll find working harder on Sunday than any other day.

I told him how the American aircraft builders felt about the runaround they seemed to be getting. He listened, grim, angry. And he agreed to call in all 19 representatives of American aircraft manufacturers, listen to their complaints and right any wrongs.

American aircraft, skilfully smeared by special interests in England, have a rabid champion now in Lord Beaverbrook. Two days after I left London, I saw the confidential diplomatic cables in Lisbon telling how the Beaver had blasted Charles Grey out of the water for Grey's studied campaign against American aircraft. When the Beaver nailed Grey, he struck at the root of what had been going on.

As editor of the trade magazine, Aeroplane, Grey could "knife" American planes and escape official censure; but when as coeditor of the semiofficial "All the World's Aircraft," Grey injected venom into the new edition with the now-famous caption about America giving support "to the last Englishman," the Beaver blew up.

A Tragedy of Modern Greece

British Secret Service Underestimated Power Of Hitler's Balkan Army, Observer Is Told

The following dispatch is from Daniel Deluce, Associated Press correspondent who left Greece in a fisherman's boat last weekend and sent from Turkey the first indications of the extent of the British disaster in Greece.

By Daniel Deluce

Associated Press Staff Writer

Izmir (Smyrna), Turkey, April 23 To 8,000,000 Greeks the German victory in Greece is as tragic as any ever conceived by their great playwrights of classical days Euripides, Aeschylus and Sophocles.

To the modern Greeks, the entry of Germany into Balkan conflict was the intervention of Fates as inexorable as those depicted in "The Orestein."

It was intervention which, the Greeks felt, snatched away at the last moment a victory won by blood and pain over the Italian legions which swept in from the north last fall.

Allied blunders and misunderstandings played their part in the bitter drama. The Yugoslavs, who planned to send an army toward Salonika as soon as war broke, never carried it out. Croats fought in defense of Serbia, Serbs were sent to defend Croatia. The British intelligence service underestimated the strength of Germany's Balkan army, I was reliably told.

Every Greek regimental headquarters on the Albanian front from Chimara to Pogradetz had planned the spring offensive which was to shove the Italians back out of Albania.

"We will throw everything into it, all our men up to 40, all our guns," Greek commanders told me before Germany marched.

Thousands of wounded in base hospitals at Koritza, Ioannina and Arta prayed for speedy recovery so they could fight in the "last battle."

Offensive Stillborn

Twelve divisions of the finest Greek fighters—hardy mountaineers of Epirus and Peloponnesus and tough Crete Islanders—were ranged along the crest-shaped front for an all-out attack expected to sweep the Italians from Tepeleni, Berati and Elbasani.

They looked forward to the zero hour as eagerly as a champion football team anticipates the kick-off. But the offensive was stillborn.

Heartbroken generals tore up their plans when Hitler launched his men and machines across the Yugoslav frontier. Sensing the Yugoslav collapse before it occurred, the Greek commanders foresaw the impossibility of maintaining their northwestern line, and they gave the order to withdraw in order.

Not all obeyed. The brilliant Maj. Maniatakes stayed with a suicide squad in concrete blockhouses the Greeks had built beside Lake Ohrid and calmly awaited the enemy advance over a field planted with 3,000 land mines.

Reluctant Withdrawal

Two nights earlier, in stockinged feet to avoid noise, he had escorted me to within 200 yards of Italian Alpini trenches and joked about the "surprise party" that awaited them.

Indomitable junior officers held Trebecina Heights while khaki battalions marched back past Balibani (where a German Stuka had been shot down early in March weeks before official Nazi intervention) past Klisura, Premeti and Pantalonia. All these towns had been won only a few weeks before at the point of the bayonet in fierce winter battles.

On heights overlooking Tepeleni, husky Evzones reluctantly shouldered dismantled light artillery, and with downcast eyes joined the Greek columns that marched painfully toward the rear.

Koritza and Argirogastro, twin symbols of Greek military prowess, were abandoned without a shot in a withdrawal executed with the precision of a peace-time maneuver—but with far deeper emotion.

Peasant soldiers cursed Mussolini and Hitler with all the trooper's traditional vehemence.

"If we live will those devils send us away to slavery in Italy and Germany?" they asked.

Morale Never Faltered

There was no collapse of morale as in Poland and France. Commanders who could easily have fled to the coast and embarked for islands protected by the British fleet stayed with their troops to the end.

Volunteer nurses remained at field hospitals until the last wounded man was safely moved to the rear.

The devotion to duty seemed to be in inverse proportion to the growing disaster.

This was the climax of hellenic tragedy which also enmeshed a British expeditionary force of somewhere under 100,000 Australians, New Zealanders, Britains and Scots—a climax elvolved from the earlier scenes of the Balkan drama as inevitably as though one of the ancient masters had plotted it.

It has the tragic mistakes of men; the diplomatic and military miscues of Belgrade and London and Cairo, the futile and bitter internecine strife of the Croats and the Serbs who refused to bury their antipathies even while the German panzers were smashing across Southern Yugoslavia to Bitolj.

As early as January, Serbian generals had talked of sending as many as 60 divisions of the Yugoslav army of 1,250,000 toward Salonika as soon as the war started, but none ever got there.

British Intelligence Failed

Outmoded mobilization orders were revised, and the Serbs were sent north to help defend Croatia; the Croats south to fight in a Serbia for whose inhabitants they bore no affection.

Harried by Fifth Columnists and ceaseless air raids the Serbs waged a hopeless rear guard fight in the retreat to Bosnia while in the south the Croats were overwhelmed at Bitolj.

The Greeks and the Yugoslavs hastily reorganized their lines at the pass south of Bitolj, but the strength of the German army in the Balkans had been underestimated, I have been reliably informed, by the British Middle-East command at Cairo.

There, the number of Germans in southeast Europe had been reckoned at a lower figure than that supplied by the British intelligence service operating in Greece

Until the death of Premier John Metaxas of Greece, the Athens government desperately attempted to stave off German intervention by suppressing or ignoring German aid to the Italians in Albania and German intrigue designed to undermine the strong pro-British sentiments of the Greek army.

Await Eid With Fatalism

The now-suicide Premier Alexandros Korizis, British foreign secretary Eden and King George of Greece contracted for the British expeditionary force about March 2, long after the Germans had begun their great military infiltration into the Balkans.

Thereafter, as the Anzacs and Britains steamed into Piraeus and marched north, the Greek masses realized that their homeland was to be a battlefield for the Axis-British war.

This they awaited with the fatalism of their ancestors. A frequent comment was:

"No matter who wins Greece will be destroyed. Wasn't it enough that we should defeat Italy? Why couldn't we be left alone to finish the Italians in Albania, then live in peace?"

U. S. Transfers 20 Mosquito Boats to British

Secretary Knox yesterday disclosed the transfer of about 20 of the Navy' fast motor torpedo boats to Great Britain to strengthen the British fleet in the Battles of the Atlantic and Mediterranean.

At the same time the Navy chief said that negotiations were under way for the construction of other small warships in Canada as another step in the British-aid plan.

The ships contemplated probably would be corvettes, convoy vessels of from 110 to 165 feet, especially designed to combat submarines, Knox said, and could be turned over to the British when completed under the lend-lease program.

Valuable in Case of Invasion

The torpedo boats now being transferred are 77-foot craft capable of speeds of over 60 miles an hour. They carry four 18-inch torpedo tubes and machine guns, and some are equipped with depth-charge racks for use against U-boats.

Especially adapted to in-shore work, they would be valuable in case of an invasion attempt and for offensive work in the Mediterranean. The transfer leaves the Navy with but 8 of the torpedo boats, but 27 more are building and the plants which produced them are being rapidly geared for mass production.

Secretary Knox said the vessels were either "on the way" or waiting shipment on American docks. Having a relative short cruising range, the craft must be shipped across the Atlantic.

80 Vessels Transferred

The transfer brings to 80 the number of American vessels of war which have been transferred to the British fleet. Fifty destroyers were exchanged for sites for bases in the Atlantic last year, and recently ten Coast Guard cutters were turned over to England.

A year ago negotiations were under way for the transfer of some of the torpedo boats then under construction, but the proposed deal was held to be illegal. The lend-lease bill makes the transfer lawful.

A primary consideration in the proposal to build ships in Canadian shipyards, Knox said, would be to help Canada finance purchase of war materials in the United States. Such buying has caused the northern commonwealth to run short of dollar exchange.

Asked about reports that the Army and Navy didn't have enough antiaircraft guns to equip its ships and troops, much less protect American cities, Knox said that this "is true of every nation of the world."

He added that very few antiaircraft guns were on hand when the war began, but that "we are producing large numbers now," and that the Navy's 5-inch gun was "the finest in the world."

Dog Owners Warned Of Muzzle Regulation

Dog owners yesterday were warned by the Commissioners that their pets, unless on leash, must wear muzzles after May 1.

Health Department regulations provide that all dogs running at large during summer months must have "good substantial muzzles." The law holds until September 30.

McGill Terrace Folk Seek to Bar Army-Navy School

Four residents of McGill Terrace, exclusive residential area in the Northwest, filed suit in the District Court yesterday to prevent the Army and Navy Preparatory School from locating in their belt of $30,000 to $150,000 homes.

The school is now located at 2128 Wyoming Avenue. Objecting to the plan of Principal Gerald J. Sullivan to move to a new building at the southwest corner of Calvert and Twenty-eighth Streets Northwest are:

Francis Walker, chief economist, Federal Trade Commission, 2848 McGill Terrace; Mrs. Gertrude W. Finley, wife of the assistant manager, American Surety Co., 2825 McGill Terrace; Harry A. Ostrow, 2869 McGill Terrace, and Georgie B. Wentz, 2841 McGill Terrace.

The corner property adjoins McGill Terrace, which is a type A restricted residential area. The Board of Zoning Adjustment on April 11 approved the proposal to move the school to the area.

Biggest Powder Plant Opens In Indiana

The world's largest powder plant, capable of supplying explosives for an army of more than a million men, will start production today at Charlestown, Ind.

Announcement of the opening of the Army's $90,000,000 plant, near Louisville, Ky., was made last night by the War Department, which said it was beginning operations one month ahead of schedule.

The new ordnance works is the second of the Army's nearly two-score munitions plants to get in production. A smaller establishment at Radford, Va., has been producing powder for several weeks. Two of the Charlestown plant's six production lines will start moving today, while two more will be in operation within a few weeks and the last two by early fall.

Nazi Tactics Not New

Meanwhile, the Senate Defense Investigating Committee was told that the "blitzkrieg" tactics employed so successfully by Germany in Europe have been taught by American Army schools for nearly a decade.

Lieut. Col. A. R. Wilson, of the War Department General Staff, testified that the principles of warfare demonstrated by the Nazis—the employment of panzer units, motorized infantry and planes in close coordination—were used in theoretical military problems at the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., as early as 1932.

"The German campaign in Poland," he stated, "was a leaf out of the annals of Leavensworth."

Practical application of the principles was blocked by lack of tanks and the unwillingness of the Air Corps to use its bombers as "artillery" for front line attack, Wilson said. Due to the small air force and plane production capacity ni the past, he added, the Air Corps wanted to reserve its planes for bombing cities and more distant military objectives.

Navy Bill Signed

In another defense development, President Roosevelt signed into law legislation raising the permanent authorized enlisted strength of the Navy from 191,000 to 232,000 and its emergency strength to 300,000 men. The act increases the Marine Corps permanent strength from 27,497 to 46,400 and permits an emergency total of 60,000.

The authorized line officer strength of the Navy was raised from 7,562 to 12,760 and that of the Marine Corps from 1,512 to 2,552.

The House Military Affairs Committee reported legislation authorizing the training of enlisted men as Army pilots, pricipally for use as instructors and transport fliers.

U.S. May Discipline Pilot Who Flew Over British Ship

By the Associated Press

Acting upon a complaint by Secretary of Navy Knox, the Civil Aeronautics Board moved yesterday to discipline an airplane pilot who flew a photographer over the British battleship Malaya as it came into New York harbor for repairs on April 6.

The board directed Hugh C. Robbins, holder of a commercial pilot certificate, to appear before an examiner and show cause why his certificate should not be suspended or revoked. The date has not been set.

A memorandum said that Robbins, identified as an employe of the Waco Sales Co., flew a 5-passenger plane which carried as a passenger a photographer for the New York Daily News "who made several photographs of the battleship Malaya which was just arriving in New York harbor for repairs."

(On March 24, Navy Secretary Knox said that "in my opinion" the movement of British ships coming to the United States for repairs "should not be reported, photographed or broadcast.")

The board also disclosed for the first time that a special regulation had been issued to pilots directing that no civil aircraft, except scheduled airliners, be operated between the hours of 12:01 a. m., April 6 and 12:01 a. m. April 7 "in that part of the air space above the upper and lower harbors of New York, the Hudson River and the East River."

house law. It was said that one of them rents a large home, applies for a rooming house license and then rents rooms to other girls who falsely represent themselves to be Government employes.

If police raid the establishment, it was said, the "landlady" escapes punishment because "she has no way of knowing what goes on in her tenants' rooms."

Blick and Hodge will be at liberty to use undercover men and vice men in the various precincts, Maj. Brown declared. They will concentrate their activities in the First, Second and Third Precincts, it was said.

The two detectives will work independently of Capt. Earl P. Hartman's vice squad of some 20 men. The latter group, it was said, is unable to cope with the situation because of investigations of un-American activities, selective service law violations, alcohol beverage control infractions and character analysis of Police Department appointees.

Records show that Capt. Hartman's squad has had less than five prostitution and disorderly house cases in nearly a year.

cially, the fiasco of this war."

After L. M. Birkhead, national director of the Friends of Democracy, had charged that the meeting would be the "largest gathering of Nazis since the German-American Bund rallies at Madison Square Garden," Lindbergh declared before his address that "un-American factions will not be welcome."

Lindbergh said in a statement that "pro-Nazis, pro-Fascists and pro-Communists or any group favoring un-American theories are certainly not for the America First Committee."

Birkhead had asserted that Nazi propaganda was distributed at many of the committee's meetings; that Nazi groups recruited members and raised money for the committee; that the Nazi press in the United States had approved the committee's program, and that a large part of the audience at committee rallies came from pro-Nazi organizations.

Handbills distributed by the pickets outside the hall tonight carried names of the Student Defenders of Democracy, friends of Democracy and the Youth Committee of Federal Union. The handbills called on "the people of the United States to fully and actively support the policies of the President" and declaring that "appeasers like Lindbergh brought England to its present dangerous state."

"I say it is the interventionist in America, as in England and France, who gives comfort to the enemy," Lindbergh told his audience. "There is no better way to give comfort to an enemy than to divide the people of a nation over the issue of a foreign war.

"War is not inevitable for this country. . . . If we are forced into a war against the wishes of an overwhelming majority of our people, we will have proved democracy such a failure at home that there will be little use in fighting for it abroad."

Denouncing war, Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, declared:

"A real democracy should have no responsibility beyond its own shores where its Government does not have absolute freedom. If we get into war our Constitution will be a scrap of paper."

Action Forecast On Alien Ships Bill Tomorrow

The House Merchant Marine Committee tomorrow will approve legislation authorizing the President to take over idle foreign shipping in American waters, Chairman Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, predicted last night.

House action on the measure, which also authorizes the Maritime Commission to purchase or charter American-owned vessels whenever it finds a shortage of ships carrying vital defense materials to the United States, is expected next week.

Meanwhile the Maritime Commission moved to enlarge its training program to provide thousands of seamen for America's growing merchant fleet.

The commission summoned maritime labor leaders, shipowners' representatives and Government officials to a conference here Monday. Surveys made by the commission's division of maritime personnel, it was announced yesterday, "indicate conclusively that the requirements for trained seamen in the American Merchant Marine in the near future will be the greatest this Nation has known."

The House Merchant Marine Committee yesterday concluded its closed hearings on the foreign shipping bill, with Wayne C. Taylor, Undersecretary of Commerce, as the chief witness.

Chairman Bland yesterday confirmed the interpretation that his bill would enable the President to turn over requisitioned Axis shipping direct to Britain, though it was believed at the Capitol that such vessels would first go into a "general shipping pool."

Proposals for a uniform Pan American policy in regard to European shipping immobilized in American ports were discussed at the State Department yesterday by Undersecretary Sumner Welles and Latin-American diplomats.

A draft resolution, expected to involve application of the principles of the Bland bill in each American republic, will be presented to the Inter-American Economic Committee Saturday.

U. S. Peace Hopes Increase, Nye Declares

By the Associated Press

New Haven, Conn., April 23.—Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, told a peace rally of Yale students today that the last week of the European war marked "a turning point in American thinking and leadership and upon American leadership."

"During the last week an awakening was felt on every hand, and there is now a much better than even chance to keep America out of the European war," Senator Nye told the group of more than 600 undergraduates and a sprinkling of men and women graduate students.

Previously, he asserted, "there was little more than no chance" of avoiding American participation.

Braving a chill wind to speak, overcoatless, in an ivy-grown flagstone courtyard at the outdoor rally, Nye charged that "the same blueprints of propaganda, the same charts, the same appeals to the American people are being employed" to assure American participation in the present war "as were employed in 1917."

"Now, however, the past week has marked a turning point. From now on there will be much more American thinking in America than European thinking. There will be much more consideration of the future of our own country than of the future of Europe."

He charged that "the causes for which we allegedly fought in the last war have not been won, and broken homes, broken hearts, broken debts and broken obligations have been the result."

"The Republic is still threatened because of the burden of the inheritance from that war."

"The Government can take us no further without involving us in war under the terms of international law."

He criticized the Selective Service, stating that "peacetime conscription is the way of Europe—the way without which no dictator in Europe could ever get to first base."

Boston Transcript To Quit April 30

Boston, April 23 (AP).—The Boston Evening Transcript, one of New England's outstanding newspapers during its 111-year history, announced at noon today that it would suspend publication on April 30.

Richard N. Johnson, the publisher, said in an editorial statement that the paper's "five-cent price in the sharply competitive two-cent Boston field had failed to produce the necessary revenue to continue." He said circulation revenue increased after the higher price was instituted in 1939, but that advertising had declined.

Fee Fixed by War Department, Officials Tell Defense Investigating Committee; Never 'Were Asked' if They'd Take Less

Fort Meade, Md., April 23 (AP).—Clustered about a drafting board in a hastily constructed frame building, members of the Senate Defense Investigating Committee conducted an impromptu inquiry today into the costs of the Army's new cantonment at Fort George G. Meade.

Under a running fire of questions from committee members perched on stools and desks, John A. Stalford said that the Consolidated Engineering Co., of Baltimore, of which he is president, expected to net $200,000 on a contract for supervising the new "city" which will house 18,000 men.

Stalford said that the contract negotiating committee of the War Department had named $226,000 as the fee it was prepared to pay for supervision of the construction work.

"They never asked whether you would take less?" demanded Hugh Fulton, committee counsel.

Stalford replied that they had not, adding that the only stipulation he had made was that his company's fee be in line with those paid to other companies for doing the same work.

Although the original estimate of the cost, plus supplemental estimates was about $10,500,000, Stalford said the final cost would approximate $20,000,000.

Fee Boosted

Stalford declared that enlargement of the project had boosted his company's fee to about $275,000, but of this amount about $35,000 went to pay interest on a $2,000,000 revolving fund the company established to pay for materials and wages pending receipt of the Government funds. He added that other expenses amounted to about $40,000, including the time eight company officials spent on the job.

Senator Brewster (Republican), Maine, asked if the wages of consolidated employes were increased when the workers were transferred to the Government payroll. Stalford replied in the affirmative, but added that many of these men worked seven days a week.

Committee members made an automobile tour of the camp site, under the direction of Lieut. Col. Arthur R. Wilson, visiting the new hospital, barracks and mess hall installations as well as the site of the old World War camp.

Senator Connally (Democrat), Texas, said the construction work appeared "satisfactory."

Daylight Saving Planned at Meade

Fort George G. Meade, Md., April 23 (AP).—The possibility that the Twenty-ninth Division may go on daylight saving time to lengthen athletic periods is being discussed here.

The plan was first broached by Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commanding general of the Twenty-ninth, at a meeting of athletic officers and noncommissioned officers in charge of company athletics. At this meeting it was suggested that daylight time would provide an additional evening hour for recreation and athletics.

A show of hands asked by Gen. Reckord brought almost unanimous response in favor of the suggestion.

Ills of Third Of Rejectees Held Curable

An announcement revealing that approximately one-third of all Selective Service registrants are being rejected from military training because of physical defects that are remediable was made here yesterday by the national draft headquarters.

Using the records of 65,000 men examined—or about 10 per cent of those given examinations by local board physicians throughout the country—the headquarters here has determined that only 20 per cent of men rejected have defects that make them unfit for any Army duty.

The remaining 12 per cent, it was said, were rejected for ailments which, if corrected, would make them fit for Army service. Of the 21,025 registrants rejected, 6,432 had correctable defects and 14,593 had ailments which make them permanently unfit for service.

Leading reasons for physical rejection of the 21,025 men, it was announced, are dental defects, 18.55 per cent; eye abnormalities, 10.56 per cent, and heart ailments, 10.06 per cent.

In another announcement issued by Selective Service headquarters yesterday, it was declared that any young physician of draft age who desires to volunteer for medical service abroad in Red Cross units will be deferred from military service. The plan, it was said, applies only to Red Cross medical work in Britain and other foreign countries.

In other local Selective Service developments yesterday were the announcements that ten colored District registrants would be inducted as replacements today, that nearly 900 District girls and chaperones had been organized to entertain selectees and announcement of a program to be given tonight at Fort Meade.

The tentatively titled "Defense Council Hostesses," who have been volunteering as entertainers and dancing partners for soldiers at nearby posts, will meet at 8 p. m. today in the departmental auditorium to elect officers and form a governing body.

The ten colored registrants to be inducted today follow:

Board 1, John H. Bell, Wilbur B. Radcliffe, Jack Flowers, John W. Johnson. Board 15, Tandy W. Marshall. Board 2, William A. Walker. Board 25, Cephas Powell, James Knight, Clifton Jones and Wilbert C. Sanders.

Darlan Off To Resume Talks in Paris

By G. H. Archambault.

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, France, April 23.—Admiral Francois Darlan, vice president of the council of ministers, set out for Paris today to resume conversations with the German authority.

In the afternoon it was declared authoritatively that, first, the French government has entered into no agreement for the return of Pierre Laval to the cabinet; secondly, the Reich government had made no demand for the passage of troops through the unoccupied zone, the allusion being to rumors that German forces may enter Spain.

The air thus cleared, Vichy returned to calf and quiet after 24 hours of rumors and alarms. It all arose from certain unwonted police measures, including posting of guards at the entrance to the town and at the railroad station, together with increased watchfulness before various buildings, including the residences of several ministers. The censor saw fit to forbid any allusions to these measures. Inevitably the news reached the outside world, nevertheless, and was there magnified to such a point that today the ban was removed.

It had been extended to foreign correspondents, although nominally censorship of their dispatches ended on January 20 except for two topics—the personality of Marshal Petain and national security. All events in unoccupied France could be brought under either of these two heads.

Meantime, the members of the pro-German party of Marcel Deat, the national popular concentration, all hatless and wearing raincoats of uniform cut and color, had been put aboard a train out of Vichy.

The police measures were explained as having been decided upon some time ago, but were put into application only yesterday. That may be. But they happened to coincide with the presence here of members of the national popular concentration, which cordially detests "the men of Vichy," and with news of the mysterious disappearance of one of their leaders, Jean Fontenoy, whose hypothetical murder by political opponents they were surmised to be seeking to avenge. Today the report comes that M. Fontenoy had been seen in Toulouse.

It is believed here Darlan may go further north in pursuance of his conversations and in order to meet certain German interlocutors. For in all these matters the German high command is naturally interested. Indeed, there are rumors that the admiral may possibly meet the highest leaders of the Reich in order that "collaboration" may be defined with precision once and for all.

Headquarters for the guard will be Camp Sibert, near Boulder City, Nev. The unit will be known as the 524th Military Police Battalion.

Strong Serb Forces Fight On

One week after the Axis-announced capitulation of the Yugoslavian army, strong forces still are fighting, it is revealed in the following dispatch—first to reach the outside world from the conquered kingdom since its collapse.

By Michael Chinigo

International News Service Staff Writer

Somewhere in Yugoslavia, by Courier to Budapest, April 23.—Still uninformed of the formal surrender of Yugoslavia last Thursday a portion of the second Yugoslavian army continues to operate along the Dalmatian Coast.

Elsewhere enemy occupation of the kingdom is virtually complete. The Axis is slicing it up, but Croatia is said to be ready to resist possession of Dalmatia.

Parts of the story of the final capitulation of Yugoslavia now may be told. At the time this dispatch is being written, some 6,000 bodies have been dug from the wreckage of Belgrade.

But only six German soldiers lost their lives when the kingdom's proud capital fell.

Italian, German, Bulgarian, and Hungarian delegations now are engaged in the process of dismembering Yugoslavia. It is understood Italy will receive the lion's share.

The situation at Zagreb is still most tense.

Vladimir Macek, the Croatian leader, still retains a following of 90 per cent of the Croatians. They are remaining in the capital guarded by their own loyal Croatian troops.

Dr. Ante Pavelic, the leader of the new Croatian state, has been conferring with Italian officials, attempting to limit Italian occupation of the Dalmatian coast.

The Croats are outspokenly opposed to Italian occupation of the strategic Dalmatian Coast and are said to be ready to fight to prevent it.

Anti-English and anti-American feeling run high in Zagreb.

Any person talking in English in Zagreb runs the risk of being shot.

Intervention of the Diplomatic Corps on April 9 saved Belgrade from total destruction.

The American Military Attache was instrumental in obtaining the withdrawal of Premier General Dusan Simovic from the Belgrade garrison.

The battered city is threatened with a typhus epidemic despite efforts to clean up the wreckage, bury the dead and restore the water supply.

The American Red Cross is doing a magnificent job in feeding 5,000 to 6,000 persons daily.

employes, Assistant United States Attorneys and persons appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The President also denied the act's benefits to temporary employes. He continued exemptions for an estimated 40,000 employes under what is known as Schedules A and B of the Civil Service Commission. The order brought into civil service employes who have civil service status but who are holding jobs outside the merit system.

Other highlights of the President's order:

Federal employes who are serving in the armed forces at the time the order becomes effective will be given opportunities to win merit status when they rejoin the civilian service.

Employes who are on furlough or leave without pay at the order's effective date may be recalled to duty within a year of the date they were furloughed or given leave without pay and be continued in their jobs, but they can't be covered under Civil Service. If they aren't recalled in the specified time they must be separated. This provision is some protection for PWA and HOLC employes who have been furloughed.

Records show that thousands of persons have been denied merit standing in times past because they were unable to pass strict physical tests given by the commission. The Presidednt relaxed this requirement somewhat when he specified that "reasonable standards of fitness and personal suitability" must be met.

The President ordered that attorneys appointed between July 1 and January 1 must pass non-competitive tests prescribed by the commission with the approval of the board. The State quota system will apply to attorney appointments. A person who has been on an attorney register three times and who hasn't been appointed will be ineligible to compete in future tests.

Many Expected to Go

It hasn't been determined yet, but it appears to be highly probable that employes in the Federal Reserve System, Federal Land Banks, Inland Waterways Corporation, and Federal Bureau of Investigation (except fingerprint classifiers) will be continued in the exempted class. The Reed committee suggested that FBI employes be brought under civil service, but not at this time of national emergency. Bank employes are understood to be ineligible under the act.

The act requires that employes who fail noncompetitive tests must be separated within six months. Several thousand employes are expected to lose their jobs under this provision as they will be given on y one mental test.

The order is expected to result in the number of Federal employes under civil service to be more than 1,000,000.

Each agency and department will be affected in some way by the sweeping order. The agencies that aren't under civil service and which will be brought under are FHA, NYA, HOLC, PWA, AAA, RFC, USHA (positions paying more than $1,960), Export-Import Bank, Surplus Marketing Administration, and Federal Crop Insurance.

Defense Problems Told to Red Cross

service to the armed forces. They addressed more than 2,000 delegates to the convention which concludes its meetings today.

"You read much about materials, you hear debates about national policy," declared Gen. Marshall. "I tell you we have an Army that has grown from 200,000 to 1,250,000 men, and it is continuing to grow at the rate of 100,000 men a month.

"By June these men will emerge as a great army in the field." Complimenting the morale of the men, he added, "and the morale is more important that the material."

He pointed out the mental readjustments selectees have had to make, saying:

"They have left their families, they are oftentimes separated from their friends, but they have the highest morale of any military group I have ever seen."

In keeping lines of communication open between Army men and their families at home the Red Cross has rendered special assistance to Army morale, Gen. Marshall said.

Citing Red Cross efforts in "liaison work" between men and their families, in the tasks of medical-social workers in naval hospitals and in the "Gray Lady units" which serve the Navy, Admiral Nimitz declared:

"We know that we cannot maintain the morale of our personnel without (Red Cross) continued support, free from all that does not spell compassion and integrity, and most of all we know that you, whatever comes, will not fail us."

Of the two chief fields of Red Cross work with the Navy he said:

"The work done by your medical-social workers fills a gap without which many former patients in naval hospitals would still be patients in those institutions. . . .

"You form, through your field service and your home service, an indispensable link between the Navy and 'the folks back home.'"

Maj. Julia C. Stimson, U. S. Army, retired, president of the American Nurses Association, discussed the role the Red Cross has played in the development of the Army Nursing Service.

Two Services Exclude Aliens

In a sectional meeting yesterday afternoon more than 800 women delegates voted to exclude from membership in two of their services any but women of American citizenship. The two services are the Red Cross Motor Corps and the Red Cross Canteen Service.

Mrs. Peter A. Jay, of Seattle, in offering the resolution, said the women drove ambulances in and out of Army cantonments and posts and could, if not patriotic, report on troop movements and other important matters. Mrs. Walter Metts, of Charleston, S. C., said in a similar resolution affecting the Canteen Corps that the corps likely would be working with the military.

Civil defense problems the American Red Cross may have to be prepared to meet include "sustained air or sea attacks" on this country and "an actual theater of operations in the continental United States," DeWitt Smith, national disaster relief director of the society, told the afternoon session.

Sustained attacks, while not likely, "are considered a possibility in some sections of the country," Smith said. A theater of operations here "seems so remote as to be virtually impossible," he said, adding that the Red Cross must nevertheless be prepared for such a possibility.

"The Red Cross officially has no opinion as to the likelihood or otherwise of these varying contingencies," Smith stated. "It recognizes that it must be—as in fact it is—flexible enough to fit into whatever program may be deemed appropriate and necessary by those responsible in the various States and communities."

In addition to being prepared for the usual peacetime disasters, such as floods, hurricanes and tornadoes, the society must be ready for an increasing number of tragedies resulting from accelerated industrial activity, he said.

Large increases in the organization's membership in early Roll Calls were revealed in an address by Howard Bonham, national director of Roll Call, at the morning session.

Lancaster, Pa., has more than doubled its membership, while New Haven, Conn., has trebled its number of members, Bonham pointed out. Elizabeth, N. J., has nearly trebled its members, while Cleveland has taken top place for city membership by reporting 203,207 enrolled members.

James K. McClintock, vice chairman in charge of finance, reiterated that the Red Cross will need an increase of at least 50 per cent in membership this year to carry out its program.

The methods of Red Cross publicity were explained in an address by G. Stewart Brown, national director of the public information service.

A new service badge, designed by Miss Malvina Hoffman, the sculptor, has been adopted by the organization to be worn by all persons who serve the organization, Mrs. August Belmont of New York, announced.

The badge, about an inch in size, is on bronze gold in the form of a shield with a red cross on white enamel below a spread-winged American eagle. The word "Service" is on the badge. It will be worn by all persons, volunteer or otherwise, who serve the Red Cross.

Besides the session on "Disaster Preparedness and Relief" at which Smith spoke yesterday sessions were held on civilian relief, the Junior Red Cross and the roll call.

Modified Income Tax Bill Offered as Alternative

with tax suggestions that may never become law. His group has agreed only on the principle of raising $3,500,000,000.

Like the Treasury plan, alternatives worked out by Congressional staff experts would leave the existing 4 per cent normal tax structure undisturbed and erect over it a new surtax system.

Chief difference lay in the far lighter surtaxes that would be imposed on incomes under $20,000 and in the exemption allowance. The Treasury proposed to allow existing married, single and dependent exemptions and tax, charity, interest and other deductions before applying the surtax, but no credit for earned income. The joint committee proposed a flat $2,000 exemption for all, with the surtax applying on the first $2,000 above that.

Beyond the $20,000 income mark, the joint committee's alternative surtaxes catch up with and then pass the proposed Treasury rates, exacting slightly higher returns from all of the higher brackets.

The proposed joint committee surtax rates impose a 6 per cent surtax on net incomes between $2,000 and $4,000, 10 per cent between $4,000 and $6,000; 14 per cent, $6,000 to $8,000; 18 per cent, $8,000 to $10,000; 21 per cent, $10,000 to $12,000; 24 per cent, $12,000 to $14,000; 27 per cent, $14,000 to $16,000; 30 per cent, $16,000 to $18,000; 33 per cent, $18,000 to $20,000; 36 per cent, $20,000 to $22,000; 39 per cent, $22,000 to $26,000; 42 per cent, $26,000 to $32,000; 45 per cent, $32,000 to $38,000; 48 per cent, $38,000 to $44,000; 50 per cent, $44,000 to $50,000; 52 per cent, $50,000 to $60,000; 54 per cent, $60,000 to $70,000; 57 per cent, $70,000 to $80,000; 59 per cent, $80,000 to $90,000; 61 per cent, $90,000 to $100,000; 62 per cent, $100,000 to $150,000; 63 per cent, $150,000 to $200,000; 64 per cent, $200,000 to $250,000; 66 per cent, $250,000 to $300,000; 68 per cent, $300,000 to $400,000; 70 per cent, $400,000 to $500,000; 72 per cent, $500,000 to $1,000,000; 73 per cent, $1,000,000 to $2,000,000; 74 per cent, $2,000,000 to $5,000,000, and 75 per cent (same as Treasury) on all over $5,000,000.

As compared with the Treasury plan and present taxes, here is how joint committee proposals would affect married couples, without dependents, in the following salary classifications:

Net Income.	Present.	Treasury.	Joint Com.
3,000	31	152	97
4,000	70	312	202
5,000	110	506	352
6,000	150	700	502
8,000	317	1,131	889
10,000	528	1,628	1,364
12,500	858	2,316	2,013
15,000	1,258	3,073	2,853
20,000	2,336	4,800	4,756
25,000	3,843	6,824	7,053
50,000	14,128	19,540	20,794
75,000	27,768	35,127	36,689
100,000	43,476	52,474	54,124
500,000	330,156	346,122	347,598
1,000,000	717,584	738,086	739,598
5,000,000	3,916,546	3,937,060	3,938,598

While the joint committee proposal would strike harder at consumers of all income classes by picking up any balance of revenue needed from new excises, emphasis would be laid in the excise tax list on items of a luxury character.

No recommendations were presented by staff experts on estate and gift taxes, from which the Treasury proposed to collect added revenue by lowered exemptions and increased rates.

While members continued noncommittal pending formal publication of both plans, sentiment appeared leaning toward a compromise between the two surtax schedules and a new move to broaden the income-tax base. Neither of the two income-tax proposals now before the committee would reach any individuals not now paying taxes.

The proposed big jump in income-tax payments brought informal suggestions for revisions in the present methods of collection. Tax delinquencies, it was pointed out, might mount rapidly if individuals in the lower middle brackets were forced to take several hundred dollars from their budget in lump sums for tax payments. Some members of the committee were studying the British collection system, providing heavier collections at the source. Others indicated they would question Morgenthau today on Treasury contentions that its tax plan would help stave off inflationary prices. These were expected to contend that heavier British taxes had not so operated.

While no opposition developed to revenue objectives of the Treasury, Republicans indicated they would challenge methods and probably present schedules of their own. Members of both parties from sections of the country interested in commodities hit by proposed new excises predicted the usual bitter committee battle over the excise-tax list.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN
Of Tired Kidneys

If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Steel Chiefs To Meet Here With OPM

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Members of the national defense industry committee on steel, consisting of high officials of the Nation's largest steel companies, will meet here with OPM officials tomorrow to discuss distribution of defense orders and possibly plans for expansion of steel capacity, it was learned yesterday.

Although it is not certain whether all can attend the conference, the officials called are Eugene G. Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel Co.; Benjamin F. Fairless, president of United States Steel Co.; Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the board of National Steel Co.; Tom Girdler, chairman ofthe board of Republic Steel Co., and E. L. Ryerson, vice chairman of Inland Steel Co.

Although the conference was called by S. R. Fuller, new head of the OPM production division materials section, as a "get acquainted" meeting, it was believed that the question of adequacy of steel production for defense needs will be raised.

Revised Steel Study

Bringing the question to the fore are reports that Gano Dunn, OPM engineer, will soon present to the President a revision of his original steel study, showing that demand has sharply decreased, and news of the plans of Henry J. Kaiser, California industrialist and constructor, to build a West Coast plant of 1,250,000 tons annual capacity.

If Kaiser's plans materialize, and particularly if his project is financed by Government funds, it was said in defense circles that "it might start the ball rolling" for plant expansion by other steels firms.

The larger companies, it was said, may build new mills in order not to lose a competitive advantage, and some firms may wish to substitute new plants for obsolete equipment under favorable tax amortization provisions.

Meantime, the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply yesterday received the first request for relief from its recent order freezing steel prices. Officials of the Phoenix Iron Co., of Phoenixville, Pa., told C. A. Bishop, of the OPACS staff, that their small company, working on small orders, had enjoyed a price differential 25 cents per 100 pounds above the prices of the big concerns. In setting prices at the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co. levels, OPACS forced the Phoenix company to reduce its accepted price schedules, the concern's officials pointed out.

They are expected to file a formal request to maintain their former prices today. It was indicated that the company does not seek a price raise, however.

Ask the General, Soldiers Who'd Marry Are Told

Fort George G. Meade, Md., April 23 (AP).—It isn't enough for a soldier in the 115th Infantry of the Twenty-ninth Division to get his girl's permission if he wants to get married—he has to ask the general, too.

Approval of Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, commanding general of the Twenty-ninth, was required after a blood test had been made on the applicant, officers said today.

Col. John D. Markey, regimental commander, said Army regulations provided that any man wishing to be married must first have permission of his company commander and then his regimental commander. If permission is granted by the latter, his request is then forwarded to the commanding general.

Before the present emergency brought an increase in the size of the Army, permission also had to be obtained from the Commander in Chief of the Army.

The blood test required must be taken in the 115th Infantry before the request is sent to the regimental commander.

House Rules Committee Defers Action on Vinson Compulsory Mediation Bill

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

The House Rules Committee yesterday withheld action on the Vinson compulsory mediation bill after hearing bitter attacks on the measure's provision for freezing existing open and closed shops in defense industries.

The committee scheduled further hearings today on the controversial bill, amid indications that its sponsors might abandon the ban on new closed shop contracts to win House approval of the 25-day cooling-off period in defense strikes.

Yesterday's committee hearing developed into a turbulent three-cornered debate among supporters of the Vinson bill, advocates of drastic antistrike legislation, who called the pending measure "a milk and water proposition," and foes of any antistrike legislation, who contended that the Vinson bill would deprive labor of fundamental rights.

Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee and author of the bill, said the measure would "put some teeth" in the Mediation Board.

Congress Needs "Cooling Off"

Representative Magnuson (Democrat), of Washington, member of the Naval Committee, which reported out the Vinson bill last week, told the Rules Committee he saw no need for antistrike legislation at this time and added:

"Congress is the one that needs a cooling off period."

Magnuson said the bill was "hastily drafted," after inadequate hearings before the Naval Committee. He urged a summons to labor, employer and Government witnesses for "a really comprehensive hearing."

Several Rules Committee members sympathetic to the general objectives of the Vinson bill indicated agreement with Magnuson and said it was not certain whether the bill would reach the floor Monday, as had been originally expected.

When the bill comes before the House, Magnuson said, he will offer an amendment striking out the prohibition against new closed shop contracts, which is expected to command strong support.

Substitute Bill

Representative Dirksen announced that he will offer as an amendment a substitute bill eliminating the freezing of open and closed shops in defense plants and setting up a "streamlined" mediation procedure.

Vinson, opening the Rules Committee hearing, insisted that his bill was in no sense an "anti-labor" measure. He acknowledged hearings before the Naval Committee had been brief, but said that no witnesses other than the three heard had expressed a desire or willingness to testify and that members of Congress already knew from their mail the sentiment of the country in regard to defense strikes.

He stated that the bill would not prevent any individual defense worker from leaving his job during the 25-day mediation period but applied only to "concerted action by a group of workers."

By considering legislation at a time when the Mediation Board has achieved "remarkable success" in handling such strikes as have come before it, he argued, "we can now formulate our policy in a much healthier atmosphere than would have been possible a month ago."

A. F. of L. Opposed

George Meany, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Labor and a member of the Defense Mediation Board, told the committee the A. F. of L. "is absolutely and unalterably opposed to this bill."

The provision of the bill preventing a defense contractor from entering into a closed-shop contract with any labor organization, except as a renewal of an existing contract, would strike a blow at "the most fundamental principle of trade unionism," Meany said.

Meany said a compulsory cooling-off period "would make it unlawful for an employe to quit his job for any reason during a 25-day period and deprives him of his rights under the Constitution."

"We would be opposed to this bill if the cooling off period was 10 minutes, instead of 25 days," he added.

Threat to Trade Unionism Seen

Representative Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, asked if the A. F. of L. opposed the pending legislation "even with Hitler marching on us?"

"We could get this legislation from Hitler, without any expense," Meany replied.

Representative Maas (Republican), of Minnesota, ranking minority member of the Naval Committee, asserted that the outlawing of new closed shop contracts "would destroy trade unionism."

The compulsory mediation provisions of the bill, however, "are really very mild," he said. "If labor prevents enactment of reasonable legislation at this time, it will wind up with far more drastic legislation."

It is for these operators—both former and prospective—that the instruction courses are offered. Persons seeking operator permits must appear for examination at the District Building, May 21.

National's Drama Season Turns Into Its Final Lap

But 'Fantasia' Will Promptly Take Over; Controversial Screen Subject Opens May 13; A Bargain on Tap at the Earle Tonight

THE REMAINING WEEKS of the National Theater's season of touring drama are definitely numbered. Following the current week's engagement of Fredric March and Florence Eldridge in the Theater Guild's smash hit, "Hope For a Harvest," by Sophie Treadwell, will come the same producing company's new spring production of "Somewhere in France," by Carl Zuckmayer and Fritz Kortner, scheduled to open with its metropolitan premiere next Monday night. Then the Shuberts' revival of "The Student Prince." After the Saturday night performance of the last-named offering, the period will be written to the legitimate season.

BELL

Not so incidentally, "Somewhere in France" is the play that first was announced as "The Last Round." As we have remarked before, that sounded too much like Jack Dempsey, the Brown Bomber, or anybody else you like in the fisticuffing racket, and the name was abandoned. What "The Last Round" really referred to was the last round of ammunition, "somewhere in France." So now you know as much about it as we do. But the end is not yet.

"The Student Prince," while it will end the National's season of touring troupes, will not darken the National marquee. Tuesday afternoon, too late to negotiate this illustrious journal's early deadlines for Wednesday, Antoinette Spitzer, Walt Disney's radiant New York mouthpiece these past four or five years, wafted into the tesselated splendor of the drayma department with one of the most important announcements of the year. It is so important, as a matter of fact, that it deserves a paragraph all by itself, if it can put up with that sort of isolation.

"Fantasia," at Last, Is Articled

What Miss Spitzer—who looks like an improved, identical twin of Ann Corio's—had to say was that "Fantasia" will open an indefinite run in the National, beginning on Tuesday night, May 13. "Fantasia" is that highly controversial business in which Walt Disney undertook to make music visible and Leopold Stokowski assumed a similar task of making color cartoonism audible. The pundits of the world have pondered the matter ever since. Some have acclaimed "Fantasia" as a coalition of the audible and visual arts that is so revolutionary as to command a place among the major achievements of orchestral and cinematic endeavor. Others have condemned it as one of the abortively triumphant debacles of all time. Readers of The Post, no doubt, will recall the asperity with which Dorothy Thompson assailed this work in a column published weeks ago in this gazette. Just what "Fantasia" is all about, we wouldn't be quite sure. It isn't a concert and it isn't a picture. As nearly as I can gather, it is an experience that the adventurous spectator and auditor must approach on his own and concerning which he must reach his own decision.

Of one thing I am certain. That is that the National Theater will stand in need of a bit of going over before "Fantasia" can hope to cash in on its intrinsic merits—and assuredly it must have many. The trick Fantasound equipment, that created so much economic turmoil in New York, will not be used here. Assurance is given, however, that the R. C. A. engineers—and they are not topped by any in the business—have evolved a substitute that is even better. Sound will spout at you from all points in the theater and numb your senses with its hypnosis. But the National still will stand in need of a bit of going over. It will get it.

Sop to Bargain-Hunting Cerberus

Cross-referencing the caption appended to the "art" appearing on this page, "Penny Serenade," costarring Irene Dunne and Cary Grant, will be given an advance public showing on the screen at the Earle Theater tonight at 11:20. Those entering the theater—if they can get in—as late as 8:50, will be privileged to see the stage show, featuring Lorraine and Rognan and the Roxyettes; Bette Davis, George Brent and Mary Astor in "The Great Lie" and "Penny Serenade" all for a single price of admission. If that isn't a bargain, you might as well give up trying to find one.

This "sneak preview" business, originally borrowed from the West Coast, is getting to be a local habit. On Friday night at 8, Henry Hiser is slipping in anothe rone, between regular showings of "Western Union," at his Hiser Theater, out in Bethesda, Md. The secret picture will star England's most popular screen comedian and was produced by the same man who made "The Citadel," "Thirty-nine Steps" and "A Yank at Oxford." I hope his luck holds.

At Least, This Room Cost More Than a Penny!

CARY GRANT AND IRENE DUNNE
as they will be seen in a scene in Columbia's production of "Penny Serenade," opening tomorrow on the screen at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. The picture will be given one of the least sneaky of the "sneak previews" tonight. There is a nice cast supporting the costars pictured above, headed by Beulah Bondi

In Hollywood

—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, April 23.

In "The Ziegfeld Girl," Director Bob Leonard has done a better job than on "The Great Ziegfeld."

HOPPER

Picture is startlingly beautiful—makes you ill that it's not in color. Adrian's gorgeous costumes, good music and excellent dancing make it outstanding. Lana Turner becomes a real actress, who holds her own against a cast reeling with top names—Jimmy Stewart, Hedy Lamarr, Judy Garland, Tony Martin, Ian Hunter and a dozen others.

Tony's singing is the best he's ever done. Hedy Lamarr has little to do except be decorative. Paul Kelly says in a speech that it isn't show business that makes a girl go to the bad, it's only that the footlights show her up quicker. Lana goes the traditional way. Judy fights her way up to stardom, just as she did in real life.

But why they wasted Jimmy Stewart and Hedy Lamarr, I can't for the life of me see. Well, "The Ziegfeld Girl" will make a barrel of dough, and who am I to carp about a couple of stars thrown in for good measure?

Charley Coburn, the grand old scallawag, says what the British need today is another "Old Bill." During World War I, when the British hopes looked darkest, Cartoonist Bruce Bairnsfather developed the cockney-in-uniform Old Bill, whose philosophic courage became the red badge of English morale. When a fellow soldier in a muddy, cold shell-hole complained, Old Bill advised, "If you know a better 'ole, go to it!" The line became a national saying and a philosophy and was later incorporated in a play called "The Better Ole," in which, incidentally, Charley Coburn did his greatest stage role, and so also did De Wolf Hopper.

Watched Director John M. Stahl shooting "Our Wife," and was struck with his resemblance to the late David Belasco, both in appearance and in manner of working. All John needs to make the likeness complete is the reversed collar and the short breath. It's his actors who get out of breath after doing the same scene over 30 or 40 times under his direction!

Billy Halop and Georgianna Young (Loretta's sister) hosted a dinner at Leone's for Billy's 18-year-old sister, Florence. Florence leaves Saturday for New York, to be met by Dody Sinclair, who will fly in from Providence, R. I. Dody's the young millionaire whose heart skipped a couple of beats for Bonita Granville when he was out here. He's 20, handsome, and at 35 will have $30,000,000 to his name! Maybe!!!!

Milton Berle and Laird Cregar have worked up a burlesque on "Of Mice and Men" that's screamingly funny. Milton plays gigantic "Lennie" and Laird, who weighs around 300, plays "George."

Not so long ago Bob Paige was singer, actor, writer and announcer at a local radio station. He would start off, "This is Robert Paige, etc. . . . The singer I am about to introduce—David Carlyle—is motion picture material, if I ever saw it, etc. . . ." At this point he would alter his voice, thank himself modestly and warble. One day a producer listened in, sent for "David Carlyle" and signed him. Of course, then Bob had to own up, but the producer had a sense of humor; so the deal went through.

Columbia

A little too obviously contrived for comfort, the sequel to "Boys Town," titled surprisingly enough, "Men of Boys Town," coasts this morning into a third week on F Street. It opens at the Columbia after two stanzas at the Palace.

Coasts is the word, for this Mickey Rooney-Spencer Tracy successor to their Award-winning picture of 1938 lacks the sincere and moving quality of that memorable piece. Now their situations are many and obvious: Reform boy battles past; Father Flanagan faces financial troubles; present conditions are quite properly revealed as shocking. But it is the vitality of that original film keeps the new one spinning.

Not that "Men of Boys Town" does not have its points. It is through such heroes as Father Flanagan that disgraceful conditions are remedied and surely their struggles deserve the cheers such a film unleashes. Furthermore, it's downright entertaining once it forgets platitudes and triteness. The cast, needless to add, is top hole, with the two stars getting able support from Larry Nunn, Bobs Watson, Darryl Hickman (as a juvenile gangster), Henry O'Neill, Mary Nash and Lee J. Cobb.

Ruth Makes Hit In 'Economy' Dress

Girls—you don't have to spend a fortune on a costume for a fancy dress party.

So discloses Ruth Hussey. At such a party Miss Hussey wore a costume that has since been one of the topics of Hollywood. Although sensational, the actress says it cost just a little over $2.

As a youngster she used to read the "Raggedy Ann" stories, and decided to go as this famous ragdoll. The wig was made of yarn and an old stocking—cost, about 50 cents. Dish towels made the apron—cost, 12 cents. The print dress cost $1.50, and white cotton stockings, painted with red stripes, cost a dime. The shoes were felt "noiseless" shoe covers she borrowed on the set of "Free and Easy."

She designed and fashioned the costume herself.

Sonja Henie Sheds Pounds In Many Ways

By Frederick C. Othman
United Press Hollywood Correspondent.

Hollywood, April 23. — Sonja Henie, the plump little girl who last year whirled around the ice in long silk stockings, velvet jacket and ballet skirt, reported today that she'd streamlined herself in the interest of speed.

The long silk hosiery, which used to cost $35 a pair and which wore out at the rate of three pairs per skating sequence at Twentieth Century-Fox, no longer adorn the Henie legs. She said she had to keep these stockings hitched up pretty tight so they wouldn't wrinkle, and that they were inclined to cramp her style.

She's replaced them with paint. It won't cost much, it won't get runners and it'll give her legs more freedom.

The skirt, which used to whirl when Sonja whirled, won't whirl any more. She's thrown that away. It weighed several pounds, and flapped, and caused wind resistance, like the bonnet of a 1914 flivver. From now on she'll wear skin-tight pants, which will slip through the air with the greatest of ease.

The boots to which her skates are bolted have been changed, too. They're much lighter than before.

That Word "Plump" Is Out

And so, now that we think of it, is Miss Henie. She's dropped another 10 pounds since her last picture, and is as sylph-like as any other glamour gal. No more can an ungallant correspondent like us describe her as plump.

"All these things, the stockings, the skirt, the boots and my own weight," she said, "are small in themselves. But when you add them up—or rather—subtract them, you've got more efficiency.

That still isn't all. Miss Henie is married now to Dan Topping, and as she puts it, a wife doesn't have as many things to worry about as a girl worrying about dates. That takes a load off your mind, and a load off your mind is as important to a skater as a load off your back.

Miss Henie, a couple of weeks ago, finished a Nation-wide skating tour which earned $1,500,000. That isn't bad for a girl who came here from Norway six years ago. During most of the tour she had a bad cold, but not because of her lack of stockings. She'd have had it anyway, she thinks.

Plans to Play Wife

Then she spent a fortnight in Florida, but it was cold there, and rainy, and when her time was up she still didn't feel rested. So she came on to Hollywood to star with John Payne in a movie called "Sun Valley." The picture is booming along under direction of H. Bruce (Lucky) Humberstone and when it's finished, Miss Henie said she intended to take a real rest from work on ice. She's even figuring on an interlude of playing wife, exclusively, and not even looking for a while on a pair of ice skates.

Problem of finding an adequate story for an ice skating star is a big one. This time the studio seems to have had a happy idea. It has cast Payne as the press agent for Glenn Miller's Band. Publicist Payne decides it might be a good idea if the band adopted a refugee waif from Norway. No sooner said than done.

The band goes to Ellis Island, with arms full of toys, to claim the child. The waif turns out to be Miss Henie, who never looked blonder or smarter in her life. The story goes on from there. The band goes to Sun Valley to play for the guests of the Union Pacific Railroad there and so does Miss Henie, chasing Payne. She chases him all through the picture. She's never done that before. In fact, she's never looked before like the kind of girl who might. Now she does. Everybody's happy except the forlorn wretch who used to have a monopoly on opera-length hosiery for La Henie, at $35 per pair.

Leonard Lyons:

New York, April 23.

GREETING: Ferenc Molnar, in reminiscing of his native Budapest, tells of his countrymen, Alexander Ince, the recent publisher of Stage Magazine, and Imre Roboz. Both these men vied for the honor of being known as Budapest's most cordial welcomers-to-distinguished-people. . . . When Adolph Zukor visited Budapest, he notified them that he was planning to visit his mother's grave. Both Ince and Roboz immediately offered the use of their respective cars, for the trip—for this was an opportunity to cement relations not only with an important Hollywood producer, but also one who remembered kind deeds. . . . Zukor told Ince: "I'll use your car." But Ince's triumph was short-lived; for when they arrived at Mrs. Zukor's grave, they found Roboz already there, wearing mourning clothes—and weeping.

LYONS

LABOR: Maxie Rosenbloom, now working at Leon & Eddie's, phoned Joe Frisco in Hollywood and offered the stuttering dancer a job in his show. Frisco expressed a desire to work, and Rosenbloom asked him: "What's your price?" . . . "N-n-nothin' at all," said Frisco. "No s-s-salary." . . . "But you must have a salary," Maxie urged. "Name your figure." . . . "N-n-no," Frisco insisted. "I'll work for n-n-nothin'." . . . "How'll you live?" Maxie reminded. "What do you want?" . . . "J-j-just," said Frisco, "oKay me with a cuppla b-b-bookies."

YOUTH: Fannie Brice's sponsors refused to permit this Baby Snooks sketch to be broadcast: Snooks' daddy discovers the girl sobbing, because her beloved pet turtle had died. "Don't cry," he consoles her, "because here's what we'll do. First we'll get a box and bury the turtle, with a nice funeral. Then we'll invite all your friends and have a party. We'll serve a lot of ice cream, strawberry shortcake and candy—and then everyone will get a bagful of toys" . . . Snooks' weeping ceases, and she walks with her daddy to the pond, where they suddenly notice the beloved pet turtle—alive, and swimming . . . Daddy looks at Snooks. And Snooks looks at daddy—and says: "Kill it."

AMITY: A lady who visited Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Miller in Palm Beach saw, in the living room, autographed pictures of 40 of the most eminent people in the world. They were all inscribed: "To Kitty," or "To Gilbert," and the photos were those of the Duke of Windsor, the King of Greece, the Premier of France, etc. . . . "Poor Kitty," the visitor sighed. "Haven't you any friends?"

OWNERSHIP: Moss Hart attended the premiere of Saroyan's "The Beautiful People," at the Lyceum Theater. Hart is one of the co-owners of the Lyceum, and this was the first time he attended an opening there, since his acquisition. . . . Moss sat in the second row, on the aisle—but that wasn't enough to give him a proprietary feeling. . . . And so, in his seat, throughout the two magical acts, Hart smoked his pipe.

POWER: George Raft dined with a friend in Hollywood last week. When the check arrived, Raft paid it—from a $3,000 bankroll . . . "That's an awful lot of cash to be carrying," said his friend. "Do you usually carry that much?" . . . "Yes," explained Raft, who ever is mindful of his lean days, "because it makes me feel good."

SPEECH: Tilly Losch tells of the time she accompanied Randolph Churchill to a meeting in London, where Sir Oswald Mosley, the Fascist leader, was scheduled to speak. Churchill went there to cover the story for the newspaper which employed him. . . . They walked down the red-carpeted hall, illuminated by the trick lighting Mosley had learned from the Nazis, and were seated up front. . . . When the Fascist speaker was half through, young Churchill and Miss Losch decided to leave, and proceeded up the aisle. But Mosley kept them there—by switching, just then, to a tirade against Winston Churchill.

ENTERPRISE: The daughter of President Vargas of Brazil last week telephoned Nelson Rockefeller's Committee, to inquire where she can purchase the Balangangan charms—Brazilian miniatures—to take back with her to Brazil. . . . And Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentinian Ambassador, telephoned the same office to inquire where she can purchase the new Argentine alligator bags immediately—to carry when she visits Mrs. Sumner Welles and Mrs. Cordell Hull.

CRITICISM: When Their Majesties, King George and Queen Elizabeth, came from Canada to New York, they passed through a village near Peekskill—where the entire countryside lined the road to see them . . . George Jean Nathan was spending the weekend nearby. Shortly before the royal entourage was scheduled to arrive, Nathan joined the crowd of observers, at a vantage point on the side of a hill . . . When the King and Queen finally came into view, the critic wheeled around, and lit his cigarette—with his back to their Majesties—thus being the only man in America who turned out for the purpose of not seeing the King and Queen of England.

Joan's Spare Time Now Nonexistent

Joan Leslie doesn't have to worry about what to do with her spare time. She hasn't any.

In addition to playing opposite Gary Cooper in "Sergeant York," keeping up with her high school education and studying French, Warner Bros.' 16-year-old star is taking piano lessons.

Joan has ployed the accordian since she was 6, joining the family vaudeville act with a special miniature accordion.

But she's always wanted to play a piano. Now that she's settled in Hollywood, she has purchased an instrument and somehow is managing to find time for lessons and practice.

Louella O. Parsons' Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 23 (INS).—The golden-haired Shirley Temple stars in "Kathleen," and then she is through at M-G-M. The reason given is that her deal was for only two pictures. She was sick and unable to appear opposite Wallace Beery in "Barnacle Bill," but nevertheless, it was counted as one of her pictures. "Kathleen" is the other. Interesting that Shirley now does "Kathleen," the Kay Van Riper story, of a little girl whose mother dies at childbirth and whose father is bitter against the child, instead of "Babes on Broadway," with Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland, one of the movies originally assigned her.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Texas Guinan, the world's greatest exponent of night club hostessing, will live again in the movies. Buddy de Sylva has bought the story of her life from her heirs and has acquired 14 scrapbooks telling every phase of her career from the time she was a movie star doing Wild West shows up to the moment when she was the queen of the night clubs in New York and discovered Ruby Keeler and other talented girls. Texas used to say "Give the little girl a hand" and "Hello, sucker," and her great charm was that she never failed to visit various tables and give a personal greeting to her guests.

Tillie is all set to toil before the cameras. In other words, "Tillie, the Toiler," is finally cast. Kay Harris, of course, is Tillie—Daphne Pollard comes out of a long retirement to play "Mumsy"; William Tracy is the befuddled Mac, with the lock down the middle of his forehead, and Jack Arnold (of Myrt and Marge fame) will be Whipple. George Watts, New York character actor, has been set for Mr. Simpkins, and Glenny falls to Benny Bartlett.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Marlene Dietrich and Jean Gabin have found each other; Frances Robinson, who was once Bob Riskin's favorite dinner partner, talking things over with Conrad Nagel at the House of Murphy; Warners had just as soon Priscilla Lane didn't marry John Barry, Victorville editor, because they have important career plans for her; Todd Karns, Roscoe's 20-year-old actor son, went to court to have his contract with Leo McCarey approved. His salary starts at $150 and reaches $2,000.

Annabella loked so cute in the hat she wore at Ciro's, where she and Tyrone Power celebrated their second wedding anniversary. She seldom wears hats; Harry Ham, who has been representing Myron Selznick in London, telling his views of the present war. He was a dinner guest of Vera Black, Sylvia Fairbanks' sister; Paul Yawitz, well-known newspaperman, and now doing a writing job here, was another guest I enjoyed meeting; Robert Montgomery heads East to his farm for the summer when he finishes at Columbia.

Cole Porter, has written seven swell tunes for the Fred Astaire picture; Stirling Hayden with his real heart, Kay, Aldridge, on a yachting trip with Bill Holden and Brenda Marshall; Mrs. Arthur Minnich denies that she has any intention of marrying Geza Herczeg when he is free.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Abuse Of Hospitality

The flight from this country of the Nazi airman, Baron von Werra, was promptly followed by an order from Attorney General Jackson, which definitely excludes other prisoners of war from finding sanctuary in this country. The first section of his order specifies that none of these fugitives shall be permitted to enter this country in future. The second provides that those who do enter shall be held for instructions from the Attorney General and shall in no case be released in the custody of foreign consuls.

The fact that the order thus appears to contradict itself emphasizes the inadequacy of the present border patrols. Apparently it is not now possible to prevent all those who manage to escape from Canadian prison camps from crossing into the United States. If this is true, then the border patrols should be reinforced as quickly as possible.

In characterizing the flight of Von Werra as "a flagrant abuse of hospitality" Mr. Jackson said no more than the truth. Quite obviously Von Werra could not have left the country without the help and connivance of others, and the attitude of the German consulate in New York is both suspicious and insolent. It should be remembered that when the flyer was released under $10,000 bond the consul general made himself responsible for Von Werra's appearance at the scheduled deportation proceedings. The reply of the consul general when asked about the whereabouts of the man supposed to be in his custody was characteristic: "I really can't say. When I last heard of him he was living in Westchester with one of our boys—possibly writing his memoirs."

The whole case indicates a flagrant breach of diplomatic usage. A demand by the Department of State for the recall of the consul general seems fully in order.

The Greek Tragedy

There can be no discounting the magnitude or the significance of the victory which Hitler has won in the Balkans. In less than three weeks his panzer divisions have overrun two additional countries and made themselves masters of another strategically important corner of Europe. The Greeks fought with bravery worthy of their highest traditions. The small British Empire force which went to their aid performed prodigies of valor. But once again personal bravery unsupported by adequate weapons proved no match against tanks and dive bombers. Again and again the Greeks and British fighting a rear-guard action after the Germans had broken through the Monastir Gap, found it necessary to reform their lines, each time closer to the sea. Being heavily outnumbered both in man power and materiel, the Allied forces could not stabilize the front at any point for any length of time. The western armies, hopelessly separated from the main forces in the Thermopylae area surrendered when their supplies began to run out. Organized resistance to Axis power will soon be at an end in the Greek Peninsula, although it may continue, as it is continuing in Yugoslavia, in guerrilla form.

Hitler has his victory. He had hoped to achieve it without fighting. The refusal of the Yugoslavs and Greeks to bow the knee to his threats, although they realized the tragic fate that was in store for them as a result of refusing, made such a bloodless triumph impossible. Hitler has imposed his will on them nonetheless, although it meant the expenditure of blood and treasure and the partial ruin of a region that has formed part of Germany's Lebensraum.

Despite the disaster that befell first the Yugoslav and now the Greek and British forces in the Balkans, it cannot be assumed that the struggle even in that corner of the world is over. The flight of the Yugoslav monarch to the Near East and of the Greek King to Crete makes it clear that the struggle will go on even as in one way or another it continues to go on in Norway and the Netherlands and other parts of German-occupied Europe. To make the triumph he has won in the Balkans conclusive, Hitler must first overcome the resistance of Great Britain. If he fails to do that he will, by his very victories, have given hostages to fortune. For if the British survive, and they continue to manifest a magnificent will to survive, the feeling of hopelessness that the Yugoslav-Greek-British debacle in the Balkans has aroused in various quarters will subside as a similar mood subsided after the even more catastrophic fall of France. As long as Britain is unconquered every subject people remains a liability for the Third Reich.

The major struggle now, as before Hitler's spring campaign, is that taking place in the Atlantic. It is on this struggle that we must focus our attention. It is in this struggle that our most effective aid can be given. And with adequate American aid that battle, the really crucial one of the war, can be won by the British and their allies.

New Tax Proposals

In view of the enormous volume of defense expenditures to which we are committed, the Treasury's proposal to raise $3,600,000,000 additional from new taxes can be regarded only as an essential safeguard against inflationary types of deficit financing. The Nation must be prepared to shoulder a greatly increased burden of taxation to maintain the Government credit on a sound basis and to enforce economy upon the civilian population. However, the Government should see to it that the new taxes do not bear with undue weight upon any particular class of our people, or relieve other groups from assuming a fair share of the burden.

The program which the Treasury has outlined to the House Ways and Means Committee appears to be open to criticism on both counts. It would drastically increase the income taxes payable by individuals in the low and middle taxable brackets, while permitting the great body of our citizens either to escape payment of income taxes entirely or else to turn over a negligible percentage of their income to the tax collector. The Treasury also proposes to extract additional sums from already heavily taxed industrial corporations without relating the amount of the imposition to the profitability of their undertakings. As we have often stated, the income tax as applied to corporations is basically defective in that it fails to graduate taxes with reference to rates of profit. Some highly profitable corporations—small as well as large—could afford to pay a good deal more to the Treasury. Others in receipt of large absolute returns may have poor earning records in relation the amount of invested capital. The proposed surtax levy of 6 per cent which follows the usual pattern is said to be designed to reach income from investments in Federal securities exempt from normal taxes. This tax, together with recommended increases in the excess profits taxes, would add nearly $1,000,000,000 to the tax bill of industry without provision for needed adjustments along the lines indicated.

Undoubtedly individuals in the lower and middle income brackets ought to pay much higher taxes than they now do. Analysis of income tax returns shows that little additional revenue can be obtained by jacking up the excessively high rates in the topmost brackets. It would, however, be very questionable procedure suddenly to raise the taxes of the lowest taxable income groups to over six times present amounts in some cases, while leaving untouched incomes below the present exemption limit. Of course, it may be said with truth that an American in moderate circumstances is lucky by comparison with an Englishman in similar circumstances. An English family with two children (even before the last increase in rates) paid approximately $1,200 on an income of $5,000. But we should not overlook the fact that the British rely much more heavily than we do upon income taxation as a source of revenue.

The further recommendation to boost excises on a limited number of articles would not produce revenues such as could be realized from some kind of general sales taxation. Nor can such levies act as a brake upon consumption in the way that a general sales tax would. The great weakness of the Treasury program lies in its avoidance of taxes that would tap new sources of revenue. What we should do is to spread the burden over a wider area instead of merely putting new taxes atop of present ones—taxes, moreover, that act to some extent as a deterrent to savings and a brake upon industrial enterprise.

Another Houston

If and when Senator Andrew Jackson Houston makes his appearance on Capitol Hill, Washington will glimpse one of the last of the old hard-riding heroes to cross the public stage. The 87-year-old son of Sam Houston organized the Travis Rifles in 1874 to stand guard over the Texas Legislature in the wild days of reconstruction. Twenty-four years later he formed a cavalry troop for Teddy Roosevelt. If he chooses actually to occupy the seat of the late Senator Sheppard, the chances are he will feel more out of place in this businesslike Congress than he would have done in the Senate his father entered in 1846. Sam Houston was a contemporary in Congress of Stephen A. Douglas, Jefferson Davis and John C. Calhoun; John Quincy Adams was devoting his last days to the public life he loved so well, and Daniel Webster was at the height of his career as a statesman and orator. It is hard to believe that our present legislators will stand out in the history of the "forties" as brilliantly as do these men in their own generation.

Merit System Complete

President Roosevelt's executive order of yesterday completes a series of steps designed to strengthen the merit system of selecting Government personnel. The Administration has gone from one extreme to the other. In the early days of the New Deal it flagrantly ignored civil service rules in expanding the Government service. Now it has brought virtually all Federal positions that are not policy-determining in character within the scope of the merit system.

"For the first time in the history of this Government," President Roosevelt said in issuing his order, "the greatest possible opportunities are now open for the development of a broad merit system which will further encourage men and women of outstanding ability to enter the Government under conditions which will offer them fair and equal opportunities to build satisfactory careers." The struggle to secure appointments on the basis of merit instead of politics has been won. And important steps toward establishment of a career service have been taken. Further progress in this direction may be anticipated as a result of the good work done by the President's Committee on Civil Service Improvement.

There will be disappointment in some circles over the method chosen by the President for selection of attorneys. Government lawyers will be brought under the classified service, but not through the channels used to determine the qualifications of other Federal employes. A special board to create a merit system for lawyers will be set up as an arm of the Civil Service Commission. But attorneys rated eligible for appointment will not be listed in the order of their competence as reflected in the examinations or experience tests prescribed by the board. This departure from the true merit system doubtless has some virtues when applied to professional men. In any event, it will certainly be an improvement over the planless means of selection now in effect in many agencies. But it leaves a wide margin for favoritism within the merit system. If this innovation proves to be unsatisfactory after a fair test there will be plenty support for a change. For the moment the most significant fact is that the merit system has once more been greatly strengthened.

No Stooges

An encouraging note on national defense comes from Camden, N. J. For the first time in its history the C. I. O. Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America has ousted two local union officers for communistic activities. That action was taken in accord with the union's policy of forbidding members to subvert its real purpose by furthering the cause of naziism and communism. Here is a salutary precedent for unions in every defense industry. The influence of communism in the ranks of American labor is often exaggerated. Yet everyone knows that agitators are at work in unions and elsewhere. The House Naval Affairs Committee is so concerned about these activities that it has approved a bill requiring affidavits from all defense workers to show that they are not Communists or Nazis or advocates of overthrowing the Government by force and violence. Legislation of this sort has proved ineffective in the past, and there is no reason to suppose that it would eliminate traitors and saboteurs now. Certainly it would be less desirable than forthright action by the unions themselves. In this critical period organized labor has an obligation to the Nation as well as to itself to oust agitators who attempt to use unions to do the subversive work of foreign dictators.

FOR ANN

Her eyelids and her lips
Are fluted earthenware
And creatures of the earth will touch
Her finger-tips.

Father had two red oxen for his plow,
Under the yoke, their strong flesh dimpled,
The first star lit between winged horn and horn.

The seed of that land grown quick in my heart
That was at peace where I was born.

And when the children are asleep
And the house still,
In the wingless air
She will stand upon the hill.

My mother mourned Aye aye, when my father died;
Wild ran the oxen, thunder-hoofed
Through the earth plowed dark and wide.

She will lift her face to the sky
Where darkness falls like rain
Into the earth again;
She will watch for a long while
The young men walking by,
And never will she smile
And no man hears her cry.

"Policy Of Delay"

The question agitating many minds at present in connection with our country's attitude toward the World War now raging is whether or not we should send an armed convoy with the ships conveying supplies and munitions of war to Britain and her allies. Not to do so, it is contended, is to render such assistance very largely valueless, a mere gesture of friendship in fact—only this and nothing more.

What thoughtful and fairminded individual, it may well be asked, can doubt which of these alternative courses of action comports best with our position, in many respects the world's leading nation, one which is assumed by many to be governed by high principles of justice, truth, honor and courage.

Whether for better or worse, what would have been the fate of the 13 original and independent colonies, had they wasted their time in interminable debates as to the pros and cons of any proposed course of action, instead of going at once to one another's assistance, as witness the record-breaking march of Virginia and Maryland riflemen to Massachusetts at the commencement of the revolutionary struggle?

Oh, yes, it may be said that methods of warfare have changed considerably since then and, besides, it must be taken into consideration, that we may have to fight enemies on two fronts. Quite true, but why shut our eyes to the fact that these enemies are but waiting for the hour to strike to convert secret into open hostility? Is not our policy of delay and evasion of the issue but playing into the hands of the Axis powers? Are we to postpone decisive action until our only powerful friend is destroyed? Is it not our boast that we have the finest Navy in the world? Combined with that of Britain will not the two navies be able to give a good account of themselves against any combination that may oppose them? But, it must be remembered, that is the situation only as it exists at present. Next year or even within a comparatively short time the situation may be changed. However, be that as it may, will the time ever come, or will our enemies permit it to come, when we can say that, in spite of this technological age, we are 100 per cent prepared?

In conclusion, is not our policy of delay, of indecision, of hesitation to come to grips with reality, of favoring a defensive instead of an offensive strategy, one that has lost us potential friends, has given encouragement to potential enemies, may lose us our only powerful friend, and is favoring the promotion of subversive activities among us for the purpose of making us a people having divided loyalties?

ALEXANDER L. TINSLEY.
Baltimore, Md., April 15.

Lord Stamp

The Associated Press, in its otherwise excellent account of Lord Stamp in The Post of April 18, says, "From a clerkship he became in half a century the head of the London, Midland & Scottish Railway."

I venture to suggest that this gives a misleading impression of Lord Stamp's business career, implying that he spent his life in the railway's service and worked his way up from the beginning. Actually his railway service began where it left off—the head of the L. M. S. Railway.

"Jos" Stamp, as he was generally known, was most of his life a civil servant. He entered the lower branch of the government service in the usual way by open competition and was assigned to the Board of Inland Revenue.

At the age of nearly 40 he was still an unknown civil servant, being as late as 1917 a collector of income tax. In his spare time he studied economics and took a degree at the University of London.

Having dealt with income-tax problems on the government side, he was offered a post by Nobel Industries, Ltd., leading British manufacturers of explosives. He soon became secretary of that corporation, and later a director. A few years afterward Nobel Industries was merged in Imperial Chemical Industries, the largest industrial undertaking in the British Commonwealth, and Stamp became a director of that.

Other directorships followed (some British businessmen hold as many as 20 or 30), and about 15 years ago he was offered the chairmanship of the London, Midland & Scottish Railway. A post of this kind, though well paid, does not necessarily involve much in the way of executive duties and leaves its holder free to travel, to lecture, to write and to serve in an honorary capacity on public bodies of many kinds.

The point to note, however, is that had Nobel Industries some 20 years ago not required the services of someone with inside knowledge to disentangle its tax problems arising out of the War of 1914-1918, Stamp most probably would have remained an unknown member of that silent but effective branch of the British civil service—the inland revenue.

ERIC UNDERWOOD.
Washington, April 18.

Warning To Hitler

I believe a great many Americans have come to a definite realization that the forces of Great Britain and their Allies are insufficient within themselves to stem the tide of Nazi aggression. With all due respect to the British, the Greeks, the Yugoslavs and all other men who defy the Nazi invaders, some element is lacking. Certainly not courage; perhaps numerical disadvantages and perhaps mechanical disadvantages. At least it has become more and more apparent as the Allies suffer one setback after another that they must draw from some source additional strength that will turn the fight for freedom upon the path to victory.

And as a result of this growing realization upon the part of Americans, I believe we are also coming to believe that that source must perforce be the United States. Unfortunately we seem to be the only nation left capable of producing fighting men and equipment sufficient to provide the necessary forces to crush the German aggressors into oblivion. Most Americans also, I think, view this belief with dread and alarm, for war is a horrible thing to contemplate. Yet, I think that Americans have also come to believe that a Nazi victory cannot be, must not be, shall not be.

And so I think it fair to warn Hitler. Take notice aggressor. When you began your persecutions of the Jews and Catholics before the war, we despised and loathed you for it; when you invaded Poland we came to shudder at the inhumanity displayed in bombing civilians and open towns. And as we have watched your insatiable greed crush into slavery nation after nation of free peace-loving peoples, we have come to hate you. And so, Hitler, if we should make war upon you, it will be waged with a hatred as deep as that of any Frenchman, Pole, Czech, Lowlander, Greek or Englishman. For if we must leave our homes, leave our loved ones, court sudden and violent death, it will be you who shall receive our maledictions. So, Hitler, if the "Yanks" come again, your empire will crumble into dust and the name of Nazi will be ground into nothing. Beware! J. B.

President And People

In The Post of April 10, under the heading "Everybody's Business and Nobody's," Mr. Walter Lippmann gave us a lengthy dissertation on the folly, the futility, of the common man's presuming to form an opinion on public affairs like strikes—he himself would not think of forming an opinion on such a matter as, say, what the President should do about food being sent to Europe, about which only Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill could know all the circumstances.

On April 14 Mr. Lippmann finds himself qualified not only to form an opinion about the President and his duties, but to condemn him for lack of leadership and for not trusting the people. There are some good points in both theses, but he has missed the point which saves them from contradicting each other. As I see it, knowledge about matters is good or bad according to the use made of it. The following quotation is an answer to both: "The majority of the plain people will, day in and day out, make fewer mistakes in governing themselves than any small class or body of men will make in trying to govern them."

The Senate did not lack knowledge in the lend-lease bill, but it did not act until the volume of protest from the common people grew into a roar, though the House acted quickly. If the common people had been as government-conscious in 1919 as Mr. Roosevelt has taught us to be, the fatal Senate action on the League and Covenant would not have canceled our plain duty and left smoldering ruins to blaze up and threaten our destruction now.

Mr. Lippmann is out of touch with the common people if he does not recognize that the President is leading us now, and magnificently, like Churchill in England. One has only to imagine the chaos we would be in if we did not have him. We know he will keep faith with us. He will do all that is possible, in spite of Senate delays, and though his hands are not as free as the Constitution provides in dangerous emergencies. A VIRGINIA WOMAN.

Of 18-Year-Old Soldiers

It is reasonable to suppose that a democracy such as ours would have to be hard up, indeed, for man power before it would force its schoolboys to drop their books and turn their thoughts to killing. A few years ago when it was learned that Hitler was drafting young boys into the army, a great wave of condemnation swept this country.

And now, even this country has a few men so befuddled with war hysteria that they, too, are clutching at children to help save the world for free men. These youngsters might well ask "What free men?" Is a man free who is compelled to risk his neck, yet is denied the right to vote? And right here, it seems, is the strongest argument against lowering the draft age.

Boys of 18 are not permitted to have a voice in Government. They have no one to represent them in Congress. If "taxation without representation" was deemed unbearable to our forefathers, what can one say of "taxing" one's physical being without representation? Surely this would not be democracy, but the worst form of tyranny.

Paths To Disaster

There is little, if any, difference between reckless motorists and spiraling living expenses, as both, in one way or another, lead to disaster.

The Post Impressionist

The House Of Gath

Ghosts have walked since the beginning of time and often in unlikely places but never did spectral visitors have a more appropriate background than that provided by a group of stone houses all nearly in ruins, but still showing traces of former glory—the home of Gath—on a mountaintop in Maryland.

The remnant of a once great estate, the houses sprawl down a long slope, past broken terraces, with fragments of flagstone walks showing through underbrush and high grass. A stone wall with sagging wrought-iron gates marks the limit of an expanse which is now unoccupied except for the smallest house, the one nearest the road, where a trail of smoke shows that someone, perhaps a tenant farmer, has the temerity to defy encroaching nature. A stone carriage house by the overgrown drive from the main gate houses the farmer's pigs. Otherwise, the wind and the rain appear to have the place for their own.

And it is said that nearby residents report ghostly happenings—wails, footsteps on crumbling stairs, white shapes in moonlight flitting past gaping windows—disturbing the peace of a countryside noted for its rural tranquillity.

The great houses were built by George Alfred Townsend, who as a youth of 21, a noted war correspondent in the War Between the States, romantically signed his dispatches with his initials—Gath. Years after the war, he came to Cramptons Gap in search of material for a novel, and finding the spot too entrancingly beautiful to leave, purchased a large tract of land with the idea of setting up a great estate in the continental manner. Perhaps, the idea of creating a dynasty crossed his mind. He was by then a wealthy man and had no difficulty in realizing his wishes, first erecting a small house by the side of the road, naming it "Askalon." In 1890, he built Gapland Hall, apparently without benefit of architect, of native stone with walls 3 feet thick and beams from the grove above, and, later, Gapland Den, a rambling mansion of 20 rooms with broad veranda overlooking the valley.

With characteristic eccentricity, he kept Gapland Den for his own quarters, Gapland Hall for his wife and Askalon with its bell tower for his children, their nurses and tutors. They all dined together in a central dining room in the Den. The income from his novels, "The Entailed Hat," "Katy of Catoctin" and other best sellers of the day enabled him to furnish his mansions with the art treasures of the world, antiques in every curious room, the walls decorated with inset plaques, bas-reliefs and paintings.

Natives of the Gap like to connect Gath with a train robbery at Gapland about that time. Nearly $10,000 was stolen and the money never found, although the robbers were caught and convicted. He is popularly supposed to have found the money hidden on his land and used it to finance his activities. This hardly can be true, since he appears to have spent 50 times $10,000. The story persists in spite of evidence to the contrary, however.

In 1896, he erected a memorial arch dedicated to Army correspondents and artists of the War Between the States on a location across the road. This monument, the only one known with such a dedication, is as eccentric in design as the companion estate. An architect helped here, but he was obviously much influenced by the ideas of Gath. A horseshoe-shaped arch is surmounted by three smaller arches representing "Description, Depiction and Photography" and bears inscriptions to "Speed Electricity and to Heed Poetry." Horses' heads, a statue of Pan and a weather vane showing the pen breaking the sword do nothing to simplify the conception. Its roll of honor includes the names of such distinguished reporters of the war as Henry M. Stanley, John Hay, Henry Watterson, Whitelaw Reid and, of course, his own. The vista it overlooks, the Middletown Valley, is magnificent.

Higher on the hillside above the terraces and pathways, Gath built the tomb in which he wished to be buried, guarded by a cast-iron statue of his favorite Great Dane, the door inscribed with the "Good Night—Gath" with which he signed his war stories.

The diplomats and politicians of Washington of the 90's came to this romantic spot 70 miles from the Capital to enjoy his hospitality. The fame of his French chef, his ballroom, his gardens rich with exotic plants, made him known as the best of hosts. His guests strolled the sweeping terraces with marble walks and rested in the summer houses of chestnut logs where now the copperheads hunt field mice in grass and weeds.

Gath's fabulous income began to dwindle. He lost his friends, literary, diplomatic and political. Eventually he was alone with the great houses. The art treasures were sold to keep up the estate, which had begun to fall in ruins by the time of his death in 1914. His heirs, who failed to see his vision of dynasty, sold it for a few thousand dollars to a company which made it into an inn.

A murder was committed in one of the rooms and few come to patronize the place in spite of its great natural beauty. The entire estate was finally deserted and left to the mercies of curiosity seeker and vandal who pried the plaques from the walls, the marble from the walks, uprooted the plants and even stole the statue of the Great Dane from its place over the tomb.

Although the people of the Gap are quite sure that the place is known as "the haunted house," no one knows for sure just who the ghost or ghosts may be. Ghosts, for surely there must be more than one. On a moonlit evening, one can almost see the great hall stir with a shadowy company of ladies and gentlemen, with Gath himself presiding, robbers with spades on the hillside, feel again the tramp of feet of the soldiers of '63 in ragged gray and muddy blue, hear the wail of slaves herded south by bearded slavers.

Or, is it only the gods of the woods as they move in to reclaim their own!

Today And Tomorrow

Forthcoming Battle Of The Atlantic

WHILE WE HAVE become accustomed to speaking of the war in the waters around the British Isles as the Battle of the Atlantic, we shall soon learn that we are taking an altogether too small and too narrow a view of the Atlantic Ocean. The fighting around the British Isles is, no doubt, the vitally important battle in the Atlantic but there is now being prepared a much larger battle—the battle for the control of the Atlantic. The object of this battle will not only be to cut the lines of supply between the British Isles and both of the Americas; the object will be also, first, to cut the connections between South America and North America and, second, to bring South America, below the Amazon River, under the control of the Axis.

LIPPMANN

In this great battle, and not in the Middle East or in the Far East, the war will be won or lost. We shall face grave decisions when this battle, which is still in the preparatory phase, really develops.

THE GREAT FACT about the geography of the Atlantic Ocean is that, owing to its shape and to the location of the continents, North America and South America are both more accessible to Europe than they are to each other. Thus from New York to Belem, at the mouth of the Amazon, it is 2,975 nautical miles and from Panama to Belem it is 2,309 miles. But from Belem to Porto Grande in the Portuguese Cape Verde Islands it is 1,782 miles and perhaps another 400 miles to the French African naval base of Dakar.

But Belem, be it noted, is the nearest Brazilian port. Thus it is nearly 5,000 miles from New York to Rio de Janeiro, the capital of Brazil, and it is nearly 6,000 miles to Buenos Aires, the capital of the Argentine. But from Rio to Gibraltar it is 4,200 miles and from Bucnos Aires it is about 5,400 miles. What is more important than the distance is the fact that on the voyage from North to South America ships as they come around the shoulder of Brazil have to pass well within bombing and submarine distance by European powers. But on the voyage from South America to Europe ships can, if the Axis is established in Africa, and in the islands, pass behind the screen of Axis sea and air power. In other words, the geography of the Atlantic is such that it would be immensely difficult for the United States to convoy ships between North and South America and easy for the Axis to attack them; on the other hand, it would be relatively easy for the Axis to convoy its ships from South America and very difficult for us, operating from our West Indian bases, to interfere with them.

THESE FUNDAMENTAL geographic facts will play a determining part in the events that are now being prepared—namely the effort to supplement the naval and air attack on the British Isles by a southerly movement to take control of the South Atlantic. Political conditions are favorable to this attempt and economic necessity will almost surely compel the making of the attempt.

For what is it that now keeps the Axis from using the Atlantic not only to blockade Britain, but to supply itself out of the rich resources of South America? If we look at the map we shall see that between the Axis and the Atlantic there is still a chain of positions. Beginning in the far north there is Iceland, which is held by the Canadians and the British and Greenland which is also protected by the British and by our own commitment. Then there are the British Isles themselves—a great fortress and the greatest base of sea power in the world. Then there is France, which though occupied by Germany, is blockaded by Britain. Then there is Spain and there are the Spanish islands of the Canaries — still neutral. Then Portugal and its islands — the Azores and the Cape Verdes—still neutral. Then there is the French African Empire from Rabat to Dakar—now non-belligerent.

THUS THE VITAL ports and islands for the control of the South Atlantic are Spanish, Portuguese and French. These three countries are absolutely at the mercy of the German army. But their islands—the Azores, Canaries and Cape Verde,—possibly their North African territory,—more probably the isolated port of Dakar—are not under the direct menace of the German army. The drama, and the great decisions of the next few months, perhaps weeks, will very probably turn on whether Hitler is not only to take possession of Spain, Portugal, and French Africa, but is to establish himself also in the islands of the Atlantic.

Very soon the question we shall be facing will not be the much too simplified question of whether we "convoy" to the British Isles or lease and lend ships; we shall be facing the direct question of what we propose to do about Hitler in the middle of the North Atlantic at the Azores and in control of the South Atlantic from Dakar and the Cape Verde Islands. As that situation develops, and clearly it is developing, the issue before us will not be how much we shall help Britain but how we shall help ourselves. If we are embarrassed now because we have not been able to fulfill our promise of help to Yugoslavia and Greece, we had better not delay thinking about how we propose to carry out our much more explicit promises to the South American republics. For the plain fact is that the issue of hemisphere defense and of the Monroe Doctrine will almost surely be posed in the next few weeks, and perhaps decided this year.

British Air Arm Grows

By the Associated Press

London, April 23.—A partial text of the speech in the House of Lords today by Lord Beaverbrook, minister of aircraft production:

Delays in delivery are not serious. Some of the firms are quite up to time, and some of them are even ahead of time.

The difficulties of the air-cooled engine have been overcome, and we now find American engines quite as good as any other engines in the world.

British fighter and bomber airplanes are being sent to America. Very shortly Americans will be in possession of every British type and will have available several types of engines.

We have already immense American deliveries. Many of these American machines are in operational use—very many. We have handed over to the Royal Air Force nearly 1,000 assembled American and Canadian aircraft, including the Canadian Hurricane.

That is a very large addition to our equipment, and I can say with authority that they are very fine machines, ready to fly and fight. I had a thrill the other day standing on an airfield with the American Ambassador when the first Liberator arrived in Great Britain.

It is a very big airplane, faster than the Stirling and carries a fine bomb load. As to the Tomahawk, an air marshal who uses it told me the other day how pleased he was with it. There is also the Catalina, which has a splendid range and most reliable engine.

Another American machine, the Glenn Martin, is doing excellent service in the Middle East. The Brewster Buffalo, is a most excellent machine which the navy are very glad to have.

The Hudson, too, is a most admirable airplane and has served us magnificently.

The first lord of the admiralty told me he had received in the last few days 95 aircraft by sea, 355 tons of airplane parts and 326 engines. That is a first rate consignment. There has been, of course, a steady drain on our shipments of aircraft by sea from America due to losses in convoy.

We greatly deplore the destruction of splendid aircraft so suitable for our purposes but the disappointment is somewhat dissipated by knowledge that the flow of aircraft from the U. S. A. is now increasing with such rapidity that we shall certainly reach one day the supply which I was authorized by the U. S. A. to promise six months ago.

We have been ferrying aircraft by air since last October and all through the winter months. One airplane made the journey from coast to coast in 7½ hours and another from an airfield in Canada to an airfield here in less than nine hours. The American Clipper to Lisbon takes 20 hours or more.

The German broadcast has just announced that we are about to discontinue these flights because our losses have been so severe. I am able to say that during this whole ferry service, up to the present moment, we have lost one airplane.

The story of the airplane we lost is a sad one. Five aircraft started out from Newfoundland. Four arrived. One turned back, having sent a signal in the night asking for bearings from Newfoundland. It landed in trees and Sir Frederick Banting, the Canadian scientist, lost his life.

The air ferrying system is not only continuing but is likely to be extended. It is quite possible that we shall be able to fly some of our fighters before long by a route somewhat different from that taken by bombers.

The scientific and technical men in our service can confidently be relied upon to make plans and launch projects for the future which will give us the improvement in aircraft design we desire. The technical staffs are given opportunity to apply their own designs.

One officer engaged in the design of bombs loaded his great bomb in an airplane and went with it to Emden. He dropped it on the town and came back, reaching the ministry at 9 o'clock, and at 10 o'clock he was describing to me his experiences in technical terms.

That bomb was the one which created so much interest not only in Germany, but in the newspapers here as the biggest bomb ever flung out of an airplane. The name of the officer is Squadron Leader R. H. Garner.

Another officer, Air Commodore Huskinson, who is also interested in bombs, left his bed during the Wednesday night attack on London and stood watching the effects of bomb explosions. Unhappily an explosion resulted in the loss of his sight, at least temporarily, but there is some prospect of his sight being restored shortly.

We have launched three fighters—Beaufighter, Fulmar and Whirlwind—three bombers—Stirling, Halifax and Manchester.

We have brought into use since the ministry was formed five new types, including the Sabre Vulture, which develops 2,000 horsepower, and I must here give credit to the firms responsible, Napier and Rolls Royce.

We have carried out the dispersal of plants on a very large scale on a vary daring basis indeed. The sums of money involved are very big.

The system has had very satisfactory success. The bombings—you have heard from the German wireless of our "immense losses in aircraft and aircraft production"—have turned out to be nothing at all because our aircraft production has gone away and we were out of the bombed area altogether.

One plant alone, which used to occupy a single site, now is scattered over five counties with 42 separate centers of production.

Mr. Mitman, an American citizen when war broke out and who, when France fell, became a British subject, is acting in a voluntary capacity as controller of fabrication for raw materials for fighter output.

The five principal operational types we have as reserve in our storehouses, scattered far and near, equal the total operational strength—that's 100 per cent reserve. If we add one light bomber, then the reserve becomes more than 100 per cent.

We are not satisfied. Very far from it. The R. A. F. is entitled to a reserve of 200 or even 300 per cent. That ought to be the object purpose of the aircraft ministry.

We made a contract in America for the production of the Merlin 20, and it should be in production very shortly. The American Government is to produce in America for their account the Sabre engine, but we must step up our own production as fast as we can. Our production has been and must be of first importance.

We must never let help from abroad—help from America, for which we are grateful—drive us from our main purpose. The fact they are dealing with us so generously and giving us their assistance so freely should only make us more determined in furthering our own resources to the utmost.

In production, things aren't bad. In February, we produced more bombers and fighters of the operational type than ever before. It was the highest figure we had reached. March outstripped February. March was another record in the output of fighters and bombers.

In that month the output of fighters and bombers and other operational types was 2½ times the production of March last year, and the March output exceeded our target program.

Seeds Of Aggression

By Mark J. Gayn

Behind The Moscow-Tokyo Pact

IN THE SAME tall, bare chamber in the Kremlin where the Russo-German non-aggression pact was concluded on the eve of World War II, Yosuke Matsuoka on Easter Sunday signed a Japanese-Soviet treaty of friendship.

Three hours later he boarded a train for a 10,000-mile trip across Asia. At the station to see him off—and to endow the new agreement with special importance—were Stalin and Molotov. His traveling companions were Maj. Gen. Eugen Ott and other Nazi diplomats who spent seven months in engineering the pact.

Around May 1, Matsuoka will return to Tokyo to reap personal rewards of his triumph—and to give the signal that will launch Japan's fighting services on new conquests. For despite its high-sounding phrases, the pact is an instrument of war and aggression. Like the Russo-German agreement, the Matsuoka-Molotov accord is Russia's blank check to the Axis to do its worst.

From Washington and London that Sunday came hurried assurances and predictions that the pact was meaningless or that, perhaps, it was a blow to Germany, for it seemingly freed Russia's hand in the West.

These statements were a smoke screen for the anxiety gripping the State Department and Whitehall. For those whose business it is to read the barometer of power politics, the pact meant both a storm in the Pacific and changing weather in Moscow.

FOR THREE months now, the Kremlin leaders have been engaged in a thoroughgoing review of their policy in the Orient. The first hint of a new trend in Soviet thought came in January—during the Communist-Kuomintang clashes in China. Moscow's attitude toward the Chinese government then became distinctly chilly.

In February, Russia reopened trade conversations with Japan. These, surprisingly, progressed without the recriminations that usually attend such conferences. Moreover, the controlled Soviet press ceased its attacks on Japan and curtailed its pessimistic reviews of Japan's economic and political woes. During these months, the United States—and not Japan—supplied the official target for the press and the spokesmen.

The next step was preliminary conversations—carried on to a large extent through Nazi middlemen—for a broad political understanding. Though for the preceding four months Moscow ignored the proposals of Japan's ambassador, the blunt, plump and jingoist Gen. Yoshitsugu Tatekawa, it suddenly displayed great interest in the plan. The talks progressed so rapidly that in March Matsuoka could travel west for the final pourparlers.

The negotiations were carried on in deep secrecy, but late in March, the Soviet censors let through a minor news item which set many in Washington and London on their toes. The item said that on his first arrival in Moscow, Matsuoka was greeted by many notables, including one Herr Stahmer.

WHAT WAS Stahmer doing in Moscow?

When the history of the war is written, Heinrich G. Stahmer might win for himself an important chapter. The only man comparable to him in Nazi hierarchy was Fritz Wiedemann, now Consul-General in San Francisco and during the Czech crisis Hitler's confidential diplomatic agent. When Wiedemann was demoted to the American post, Stahmer took his place at Hitler's side. His forte was the Far East, and he was apparently "on the inside" during the negotiations for the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo military pact.

With the rough draft of the agreement and Hitler's personal messages to Japanese leaders, Stahmer left Berlin late in August, 1940, arriving in Tokyo September 14. His special assignment was to persuade the hesitant navy and big business that the tripartite war pact was an undisguised blessing for Japan. Aided by Ambassador Ott and a few Japanese pro-Axis generals and diplomats, Stahmer concluded his mission in ten days. In the week of September 17, the war pact was approved by the cabinet, the imperial headquarters and the Emperor. On September 27, 1940, it was signed in Berlin.

Stahmer's activities were blue-pencilled out of the Japanese press by police censors. But a few provincial papers managed to slip in a few reports indicating Stahmer's importance and—with seeming irrelevance—stressing his interest in Japanese-Soviet rapprochement.

After a short stay in Tokyo, Stahmer left for the West. It was assumed that he was back in Berlin until he suddenly popped up at the Moscow station welcoming Matsuoka. Another Nazi who unaccountably tarried in Moscow en route to Berlin was Ott, a brilliant and ruthless diplomat who back in 1936 engineered the original anti-Comintern agreement.

IN 1939, OTT, mostly on his own, began to promote a Japanese-Germany-Italy war axis. He was able to win support from the Japanese army, and in the third week of August, 1939, the cabinet approved the plan. But on August 23 Germany and the Soviet signed their nonaggression pact and made ready to strike at Poland. The Japanese cabinet was compelled to resign, and the pro-Axis leaders went into momentary retirement. It was a humiliating experience for Ott, but he quickly adapted himself to the new trend in German foreign policy and began preaching Japanese-German-Soviet collaboration.

Apart from the presence of Ott and Stahmer in Moscow, there was another alarming news item. Joseph Stalin personally attended the original Matsuoka-Molotov interview. The Soviet-censored report lightly dismissed the meeting as a courtesy call and said that Stalin merely puffed at his pipe and remained silent. But to those aware of the "Stalin myth"—his conscientious effort to remain in the background except at events of transcending importance—his presence at the interview was an important straw in the political wind.

The final confirmation came when Matsuoka extended his visit in Moscow for three days. Through the screen of rigid censorship in Moscow and Tokyo, the hands of Ott and Stahmer—and behind them of Ribbentrop—were becoming apparent.

To Russia the new pact represented a major reversal of Far Eastern policy as important as the famous "retreat from China" in 1927. Fourteen years ago Moscow found its efforts to revolutionize China defeated by the coalition of foreign powers, Shanghai bankers and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. The Kremlin then decided to call a halt to revolution-making abroad and instead embarked on a program of industrialization and militarization.

MOSCOW felt confident that sooner or later the so-called "capitalist differences" would lead to another World War. If Russia were strong enough to keep outsiders off her pastures and wily enough to stay out of foreign pastures herself, she would eventually find herself holding the balance of power in a war-weary, exhausted world.

In 1937 Russia cautiously returned to the Pacific stage, but this time to take part in a power play, not to foment revolution. Japan was getting too strong, and further successes in China threatened to make the Japanese generals the arbiters of Pacific destinies. Moreover, Moscow still had a sentimental and hopeful interest in China. Thus, Russia became China's arsenal—supplying an air force, artillery, trucks and gasoline to fight Japan. This aid was one of the principal factors in China's continued resistance and one of the major causes of Soviet-Japanese friction.

China's dependence on Soviet aid naturally gave Moscow a dominant voice in Chinese politics. It is true that this voice had not been raised, but until the fall of 1940 there was little doubt as to who was calling the tune in Chungking.

Then came President Roosevelt's "arsenal of democracies" decision—and with it increased assistance to China. Each loan and each airplane received from the United States lessened China's dependence on Russia. The first result was the decision of the conservatives in Chungking to halt the increasing poaching of the Chinese Red armies upon the Kuomintang's own lush preserves in central China.

On January 21, the Fourth Red Army was all but wiped out in a sudden attack by Gen. Chiang's troops.

SEEING THEIR new dream of a Communist China shattered by what was in effect American loans, the policymakers in the Kremlin went into a huddle. From the headlines in Moscow's Pravda it is almost possible to date the huddle from January 10 to 27. On the latter day, the official Tass News Agency broke the silence with a broad and ominous hint that new attacks on the Red armies would lead to a civil war in China.

Only a fortnight later, Moscow resumed trade negotiations with Japan. Herr Stahmer must have appeared on the scene at the same time.

The objectives of the new Soviet policy were two:

1. To show the Chungking conservatives that they could not trifle with Russian affections;

2. To enable Japan to strike south by freeing her mind of fear of Soviet attack. Such a stroke would both involve Japan and the United States in a sharp and perilous conflict in the South Seas and curtail American aid to China—thus automatically restoring Soviet dominance in Chungking.

It is an open secret that Moscow has little love either for Japan or the United States. If both become exhausted in the struggle, the Soviets alone will benefit. This is a very cold-blooded view of the world conflict—Realpolitik—for which the Soviet leaders cannot be criticized. But the earnestness with which Moscow is determined to pursue the new policy was indicated in its recognition of Manchukuo—undoubtedly a humiliating experience for the Kremlin.

Possibly also lurking in the minds of Stalin and Molotov was the desire to strengthen Russia's stand in Europe by freeing her of worries in the Orient. But this desire could not have played the important role assigned to it by wishful anti-Nazi observers.

THE PACT was promoted by Nazi middlemen. It had been under consideration many weeks before the German master-stroke in the Balkans. It was accompanied by an agreement for the sale of a tremendous amount of Russian mineral oil to the Reich. And, finally, Stalin would be guilty of child-like naivete if he thought he could trust the Japanese to stay away from Siberia if Germany attacked the Ukraine.

Rather, the pact was directed at safeguarding neither the western nor the eastern boundaries of Russia. Its real aims were to let those who would, do mischief. For—to Moscow's mind—on the battlefields and in fear and hunger-gripped land would sprout the seeds of world revolution.

The Once Over

Private Purkey's Papers

Dear Ma: I got your letter about them tanks you seen in the newsreels, but do not worry about me as the tanks are plenty tough and I am not in no more danger than I been lots of times in subway jams. And in tanks you get a seat.

Of course you bounce around a good deal in a army tank and it ain't air condishuned and you don't get no choice of upholstery. The first time I was in one it was like going over Niagara Falls in a iron ashcan and went through a whole day of practice in one without knowing if I was right-side up accept from hearsay. But that old jallopy I used to drive back home wasn't no beauty rest neither.

If I only could drive one of these tanks in traffic a couple of hours back home I could get even with a lot of road hogs and I could make the taxi drivers say uncle in no time. I would give anything to go out for one Sunday afternoon auto trip to the beach and argue things out with them Sunday drivers witch take the middle of the road and won't move over and so forth.

I got detailed in a demonstrashun of one of the new small tanks witch they call "iron bronckoes" the other day. They are used for recognizance work, but they went so fast even through rivers and over swamps and woods that I could not recognize nobody. They are the Tom Thumb tanks, but why they named them after a hitch-hiker I do not know yet. They are four-passenger, and each passenger is a arsenal of democrats. One man is a machine gunner and the others carry rifles. It also tows a trailer witch has a cannon on it. It makes 65 miles an hour on good roads witch it was never on when I was inside and about 40 miles over catch as catch can country. You get 16 miles to the gallon even through public dumps the captain says but even if you don't it don't make no difference becuz the last thing a guy worries about inside one of these iron gymnazziums is gasoline ekonomy.

I made the mistake of just asking about this just for conversashun purposes and the other jeeps got very sarkastical and said they would have the driver stop at the first pumping station to check the gas, wipe the windshield and get a price to simonize the body. I would of thought up a snappy answer only just at that minute the tank went through a couple of stone fences in first speed and I got knocked unconsciousless.

But do not worry as I would rather get knocked unconsciousless riding around in anything than walking on my sore dogs. I hope to get a workout in a super tank soon. There is more room in them and a jeep who was in one told me it didn't see the danger sign at a railroad crossing and hit an express train but did not discover it until the end of the trip when one of the boys heard a funny rattling noise and when he got out to investigate he found the locomermotive and three coaches wrapped around one of the headlights.

Well mom I must close now and do not worry about me getting into any dice games, accept only once in a while and I never lose money. Your loving son,

OSCAR.

P. S.—I am low on money again. Could you send me about four dollars?

"But I warn you that if a political government succeeds me the city will be in receivership in three years."—Mayor LaGuardia

Nonsense. It would take any old-fashioned political government at least six years to get past the point where the mayor wasn't just looking bewildered and demanding: "Now what do these figures mean?"

Clearing The Seas

THE OUTLINE of a solution to the crucial shipping problem is beginning to emerge from the welter of rumors and conjectures. The outline, to be sure, is incomplete; the solution is tentative. But the main point is that the President and his advisers at last seem to have worked out an integrated system by which they hope to protect our war materials on their way to Britain from the menace of German bombers and submarines.

ALSOP

The known parts of the system are three in number. First, although the President is not ready to order the Navy to convoy merchants vessels through combat zones, partial convoying will be resorted to. Ten days ago, the decision had already been taken to convoy to Greenland, thus reducing the area to be protected by the British Navy by a huge expanse of ocean. Now, probably because the inadequacies of the new Greenland base make transfers there difficult, there are authoritative reports that the convoying range will be extended to Iceland, where extremely modest but usable port facilities are available at Reykjavik.

SECOND, small, makeshift aircraft carriers to accompany convoys are being hastily built both in Britatin and in this country. A number of British and American merchant ships are being converted for the purpose, by the addition of catapults and flight decks with trip-lines. Each will carry ten or more pursuit planes. The pursuits will maintain an air patrol for submarines, serving as the eyes of the convoying destroyers. And they will also afford protection against the new German Focke-Wulf Cusiers, which have done such damage by spotting convoys for the submarine wolf packs, as well as by bombing shipping from the air. The first of the American merchant-ship aircraft carriers is nearing completion.

Third, medium bombers and probably pursuits will be ferried to Britain by air, as the long-range bombers are now. At one time it was proposed to use the bombers on the way to protect convoys, but this has apparently been found too complex an operation. The decision appears to be that it will suffice to reduce the shipping burden, without attempting a protective mission at the same time. American pilots are likely to be called for to do the ferrying, as they now do on the long-range bombers. For the shorter range ships, the ferry will be accomplished in a series of jumps, from Newfoundland, perhaps, to Greenland; thence to Iceland, and thence to Scotland.

MORE OR LESS extensive public forecasts of each of these expedients have already been heard. The important thing is, however, that they are not isolated expedients, complete in themselves, but that they belong in the integrated system aforementioned. They are by no means all of the integrated system, moreover. For example, it is known that additional air protection will be afforded to the convoys besides the converted aircraft carriers, although it has not been revealed whether this protection is to be given by the transfer to Britain of more American flying boats or in some other way. Then too, the mere act of sending American naval vessels on convoy duty to Greenland or Iceland is incomplete in itself. In order to fit American convoying in with British convoying, elaborate arrangements must obviously be made.

Projecting the whole from the parts, in short, it is pretty clear that the contemplated system of shipping protection will be both bold and comprehensive. Whether it will be sufficient for the purpose, only a practical test can show. Whether it will come in time is also uncertain. Meanwhile, however, one can enjoy the President's little joke on the opposition, who have made such a tremendous row about all-out convoying that any more cautious scheme will seem sensible and acceptable. There are grounds for suspicion that the joke was intentional, and even that the unfortunate Senator Tobey's much-vaunted evidence of convoying was planted on him to fan the flames of debate.

KINTNER

MORE SERIOUSLY, it is impossible to minimize the significance of the new shipping plan, as an indication of the progress of the President's policy. In these last weeks, of course, he has seemed to be inactive. The seeming has been deceptive. With Harry L. Hopkins and the heads of the service departments, he has been working intensively on the shipping and other war problems. He has prepared another advance along the line laid down by him long ago.

Before the advance is made, the signs are that the President will do some plain talking to the people. As already suggested in this space, he is also likely to define the terms of American partnership with Britain, speaking symphonically with Winston Churchill. Men who have been working with him say "We're all set to go; it's up to him now to pick his time and place." It is to be hoped that he will not wait too long for a suitable moment. For it is a tragic waste of the most precious and irreplaceable of all commodities to delay the next advance even by a day.

60 Win Prizes At Friends School Annual Pet Show

A friendly police dog owned by Helen Compton, seventh-grader, was awarded a silver cup for "personality and poise" yesterday before the curious eyes of an assortment of snails, ducks, mice, cats, salamanders and one calf, at the seventh annual pet show at Sidwell Friends School.

Wth 120 entrees ranging from turtles to chickens, a family of rare Syrian "golden-haired hansters," owned by Suzanne Veldee, stole the show. Hansters, it seems, are rodents that look very much like rats, but aren't.

The show, sponsored by the second grade, with entrants from all classes, was arranged by Mrs. Charlotte C. Moreau, second-grade teacher, and judged by a parents' committee headed by Mrs. Charles I. Brown.

Approximately 60 prize-winners included:

Most unusual pet, a crawfish owned by Silvia Turlington; most useful pet, a calf owned by Harry Eaton; best named pet, a cat named "Salt and Pepper" owned by Polly Miller; tamest pet, a duck owned jointly by Billy Bernard and Neal Rutledge; largest pet, a sheep dog owned by Frances Abbot, and smallest pet, a colony of ants owned by Charles Dubois.

Miss Compton's police dog, which has followed her to school for years, was awarded the prize for the most outstanding pet.

Among the dog entrants, one prize was won by Billy Douglas, son of Justice Douglas of the Supreme Court, for his cocker spaniel. Other prizes were awarded for the best pet in the cat, mice and bird class.

"Zito O Vasilus! Zito Hellas!"
"Long Live the King! Long Live Greece!"

Even while newspapers banners told that part of the Greek Army had surrendered and that the King had fled, Washington Greeks yesterday mingled at St. George's Day rites and exchanged assuring saluations with the Greek Minister.

From his chair in the front of Saints Constantine and Helen Greek Orthodox Church, Cimon Diamantopoulos turned to the saddened faces behind him, raised his left arm and black homburg in a salute, and cried out:

"Zito O Vasilus!"

The worshipers responded with a hearty "Zito," the Minister uttered "Zito Hellas," and they returned another "Zito!"

And when the Minister and his legation party left through the church door under fluttering American and Greek flags, his brief but significant word for the press was that "we are always fighting, that is enough."

The Minister also paused a moment to speak to Andrew Jarvis, chairman of the Greek War Relief Committee of Portsmouth, N. H., and to thank him for the action of the New Hampshire Legislature in adjourning on March 25 in honor of Greek Independence Day. Jarvis, delegate to the Red Cross convention here, was among those urging the adjournment.

With the Minister were Mme. Diamantopoulos, the Counselor and Mme. Depasta and Stephen Koundouriotis, legation secretary.

At the close of the doxology, the Minister paused to chat with the Rev. Thomas Daniels, pastor, near an ikon depicting St. George slaying the dragon. St. George is the patron saint of Greece's ally, England, as well as one of the Greek patrons. Many of the ikons in the local Greek churches are the work of the famed monks of Mount Athos, now in Nazi-occupied territory.

For the diplomat, as well as for others in the congregation, there was antidoron, or blessing bread, after the services. Father Daniels earlier blessed the loaves on a white-clothed table flanked by three candles.

Early in the service, Father Daniels asked special blessings for the Greek government, the army, navy and air forces, and for the governments of America and England. He prayed for spiritual guidance for President Roosevelt in the world crisis.

Throughout the rites in the white brick edifice at Sixth and C Streets Southwest, there was no mass weeping at the tragic turn of events. But there was frequent individual sobs from the black-garbed women and the men.

From 10 a. m. until after 1 p. m. they came for the services. Some dropped in for a few minutes from their daily duties, others lingered throughout.

Only Fresh Vegetables Keep Vitamins

Kept Too Long, They Lose All Dietary Value

By Ida Jean Kain

AT AN institution where plenty of vegetables were being served, the incredible happened—scurvy broke out. And the investigation traced the cause of the trouble to the method of cooking.

This sample of the temperamental behavior of vitamin C goes to show how careful the housewife must be if she is to keep the vitamin in vegetabes and fruits until they are consumed, instead of serving foods that did contain vitamins, and was cited by Dr. Faith Fenton, professor of foods and nutrition at Cornell University, in a talk before food editors.

Although each vitamin is a law to itself, vitamin C—since it is the most easily destroyed—may be taken as the criterion. The first question that arises when we attempt to save vitamin C, Dr. Fenton pointed out, is: How fresh are fresh vegetables? Are they so called just because they have not been cooked?

Lose Vitamin Content

If the vegetables have been on hand too long they are no longer fresh. When kept at room temperature for a few days, the green, leafy vegetables lose about half of their Vitamin C content. To be sure of getting the highest vitamin C value in vegetables, the housewife should market early and select young, tender vegetables which have not been crushed or bruised.

Although the material of the cooking pan is considered unimportant, the method of cooking—as suggested by the investigation at the institution—can make a great difference. Because it allows for the use of very little water and the vegetables are cooked in such a short time, the pressure saucepan is often favored. Moreover, the oxygen is rapidly driven out of the pan after the vegetables are put in, and that is another point in its favor.

Experiments have shown that the less water used the better. But however much or little water used, it should be served in some way and not thrown down the drain.

Don't Add Soda

Although vitamin C is more stable in acid foods, soda should not be added to tomatoes or any other vegetables while cooking.

In properly selected, prepared and canned vegetables, the vitamin C is so effectually preserved that the content of the commercially canned products is comparable to that of fresh cooked foods. In reheating the canned vegetables, however, they should not be allowed to simmer and the liquid should be utilized.

Frozen foods also retain their C value. But the food should not not be defrosted before cooking and all the "frost" should go into the kettle.

Since vitamin C is not stored in the body it must be furnished every day. Better still, three times a day. And rather than depend entirely on one food for this vitamin, it should be conserved in the general foods.

Girl Elopes With Another Man, When Her Fiance Denies Her Plea for Immediate Marriage; Dismayed, He Asks How to Square Himself With Her People

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a girl in my home town for about three years. She is 22 and I am 26. Last summer we definitely decided to become engaged. We let our plans be known to our parents and friends, but for economic reasons, I felt we should not be married until this coming May. I made this clear to the girl from the start and she assured me she would be happy to wait.

After a few months, her friends began to ask just when the marriage was to take place. I learned that she hadn't made it clear that ours was to be a long engagement. The girl urged me on many occasions to go through with the marriage at once. She pointed out that many couples were living on the same salary as mine. But I could not bring myself to take the step at the time. I felt that by waiting until May, I would not only be debt-free but also have enough money saved to start us off decently.

Quite unexpectedly, I was offered a civil service job in Washington—a job promising better pay, greater security and larger opportunity for advancement. I took the job, arriving here in January. My fiancee was much upset at the prospect of separation. Again, she begged me to marry her before I left; but I could see no point to that and assured her I would make every effort to establish myself here, so that we could go through with our plans for May.

Living costs here proved to be much higher than I had expected, and I learned that my job carried no guarantee of lasting longer than the defense emergency. Unable to save money as fast as I had expected, I wrote to warn her that I might not be able to send for her until June or July, and suggested that she make plans for the wedding in such a way as to avert embarrassment in case it had to be postponed a month or two.

She took the attitude, in her reply, that I thought I was doing her a favor in marrying her. She told me she was "definitely through." I wrote back, explaining my position at great length, assuring her of my love, apologizing for my tactlessness, and begging her to reconsider. She answered that she had forgiven me, but that she was so shaken that she was no longer entirely sure she wanted to marry me. She asked for time to think things over. That was six weeks ago and I haven't heard from her since. Neither has she returned the engagement ring. In the meantime, I have written her several friendly letters, telling of my progress. But I did not beg her further to marry me, as I felt there was time enough for that when I was in a position to support her.

This week I was greatly shocked to learn that she had practically eloped with a boy she had known in high school—who has been quietly in love with her ever since, as was generally known. Although she had taken up with him after our quarrel, her parents and friends (so I hear) were greatly surprised at their marriage, as she had not gone with him for years, and never, at any time, showed any special love for him.

I have learned in a round-about way that her parents blame me for the elopement, and also have their doubts that the marriage will work out. Apparently they have the idea that I "let her down," after all these years, and thus provoked her unwise step. Naturally, I am greatly disappointed and heartsick because I have lost her. I was under the impression she loved me greatly. I cannot understand why she would do such a thing without at least letting me know she had definitely decided against me and was going to marry another man. I had succeeded in landing a permanent job and was saving all I could to send for her as soon as possible.

These are my questions: Under the circumstances, does her action call for a statement from me—to her or her parents? If so, what attitude should I take? I would like it known that I still loved her and planned on marrying her as soon as possible. However, I don't want to lose my pride, or her respect for me, by throwing myself at her feet if it is too late. Since I must write to her (or her family) within the next week—if it is to be done at all—I would sincerely appreciate your immediate consideration of my situation. Sincerely, R. J. W.

Man's Attitude Implies A Guilty Conscience

DEAR R. J. W.: It is unmistakeably evident, from all you say (and the tone in which you say it), that the girl was right in inferring that you "thought you were doing her a favor in marrying her." Obviously you are more relieved than sorry to have her "off your hands." You are dismayed, to be sure—but more because the break wasn't negotiated in such a way as to give you a clean bill of health with the home folks, than because you "lost" the girl or were jilted by her.

That sentence where you say, "I would like it known that I still loved her and planned on marrying her as soon as possible," simply isn't the reaction of a man in love. It is the utterance of a man who wants to read into the record the fact that he was prepared to do his duty; that he is not the sort of guy who backs down on his word.

I suspect that you are more than a little ashamed of yourself, and sorry for the girl—for ever having got yourself involved with her to the point that an "engagement" ensued, and marriage plans had to be made and remade. And it is your sense of guilt at having at once "led her on" and "put her off"—so that finally she reacted to your essential intention, because soul-sick of playing ball with your plausible stalling—that has you wondering how to square yourself with her and her parents.

If you had been devoutly desirous of marrying the girl, and were—at the time when news of her elopement reached you—completely engrossed in a plan of action (of work and saving) designed to hasten the wedding day (as would be the case of a man in love), you would never suppose that you owed the girl or her parents an explanation of your status or intentions. On the contrary, you would feel that you had been dealt a shocking injustice—and long before now, you would have been "burning up the wires" with telephone calls and telegrams, demanding some explanation from them, some reprieve from the catastrophe that had overwhelmed you.

Under the circumstances, since you hadn't heard from the girl for six weeks, at the beginning of which time she had broken the engagement; and since neither she nor her parents has honored you with an announcement (either formal or informal) of the marriage, it seems to me that you have no social obligation to interject your sentiments into the situation. However, on the other hand, there is no reason why you shouldn't send her and/or her parents a letter expressing your alleged desolation at the unexpected turn of events, yet gallantly wishing the newlyweds all happiness and good fortune. It seems to me it would be undiplomatic in the extreme to assure either the girl or her parents, at this late date, that you would have been glad to marry her, supposing she had been willing to wait your pleasure!

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Dutch Pilgrim Styles Seen in Spring Neckwear

New National Gallery of Art Source of Fashion Inspiration

By Jane Driscoll

The Post Fashion Editor

MORE than a colossal structure in marble, dedicated to housing famous art collections, the new National Gallery of Art is a haven of inspiration for fashion designers. According to Louise Barnes Gallagher, New York designer, there is no other gallery in Europe which is as lovely and inspirational.

Mrs. Gallagher

"There is no reason why America cannot become the fashion center," said Mrs. Gallagher, "because we have everything right here to work with." She was referring, especially, to the new gallery, and thinks it will draw visitors from all over the country. "If Paris does come back as the fashion center," she continued, "it will be because we have not pushed our American designers."

Mrs. Gallagher thinks the individual consumers are responsible for the acceptance of American-designed clothes. "Formerly they have put their stamp of approval on anything that came from Europe regardless of whether it was practical and wearable," she said. She further believes that if we would give enough encouragement to our designers, they would "dare to be different," and then we would like the clothes they design.

Will Be More Suitable

There is sound logic back of Mrs. Gallagher's reasoning. It is probable that the clothes we will wear in the future will be more suitable to the American woman's needs. They will be striking in a practical sort of way. Naturally our designers know better what the woman on our shores needs to make her chic, than if they were designing for someone a thousand miles away.

Mrs. Gallagher was impressed by the great number of people who were filing through the new galleries. "Foreigners have been trained from early youth to appreciate their museums," she remarked. "Any time you went through them you could see school children with guides. Observing the guides lecturing to youthful listeners in the National Gallery, she said, "These children are learning now to protect and create—and they can't be taught too quickly."

Influence of Art

At the present time Mrs. Gallagher sees a direct relation between the paintings displayed in the Dutch School exhibit and the current costume trends for spring. The wide pilgrim collar effect, the basque waist, the pinafore, the full skirts and the peplum effects are all styles that women love, she pointed out. They all are fashions very similar to the costumes worn by the early Dutch pilgrim who came to this country.

As the paintings in the Dutch School reveal, these styles were worn by women of means, as well as those of the peasant class. They also show that the men in those days wore tricornered hats and generous flowing capes with two-tiered collars, not unlike those in vogue for women this spring.

All in all, we are bound for style trends that are purely individual and indicative of freedom loving American women. More than likely there will be a barrage of fashions inspired by the old masters. Even the droopy shoulders we hear so much about in suits and dresses this spring are not a modern innovation. Many of Gainsborough's fashionable ladies are shown wearing droopy shouldered gowns.

Old 'Faithfuls'

Why do we make such a to-do about the brand-newness of man-made materials, such as synthetics and plastics . . . after all aren't glass, pottery, paper, linoleum and other old favorites just other older versions of man's ingenuity?

Vermont Products Featured at "Sugarin' Off" Party

WHEN a child it was a great delight for my sister and myself to gather some clean freshly fallen snow and make ourselves a sundae by pouring sirup over it. That pleasure no doubt grew out of the old custom of the Green Mountain State—Vermont—which taps wealth and fame from the maple of its rock-ribbed hills.

Maple sirup can definitely claim a New England heritage, for ever since the Indians taught the early settlers to tap the maple trees, it has played an important part in the industry of the State and in the Vermont diet.

A "Sugarin' Off" party of the Vermont Association of the District of Columbia, to be held Friday at the Washington Club, will re-create for its members the time back home when the sap begins to "run."

Fresh from the oven will come hot biscuits on which to eat maple sirup. One hundred and twenty pounds of maple sirup and 12 dozen sugar cakes are being sent from St. Johnsburg, Vt., by the Carey Co. Arthur LaPoint of the same city is helping "old home week" by contributing sage cheese for the party.

Mrs. Mable Miles Pierce, on the committee of the association, says that the hot maple sirup will be served on shaved ice. The sirup is boiled down until is forms a ball in cold water, and is just thick enough to wrap around the fork. Then it is ready to be poured on the "snow."

Unsweetened doughnuts and sour pickles are also foods that will be eaten by Green Mountaineers at this party. These foods are exactly the ones that have always been served at "sugarin' off" parties. From the New England Cook Book, published by the Culinary Arts Press, comes the following recipe:

Maple Sugar on Snow

"Children delight in eating chilled dishes and here is an old-fashioned Vermont recipe that never fails to please youngsters or adults, too.

"Maple sugar or sirup may be used in preparing this sweet, but the sirup is best if it can be obtained. Boil the sirup until it will form a soft gummy covering when dropped upon snow. Gather pure, clean, freshly fallen snow in a pan. Place the hot maple liquid in a cup. Put the sugar on the snow, a spoonful at a time. The sugar will form a delicious soft lump. Served with plain doughnuts, hot coffee and sour pickles, there is little to compare with its tasty simplicity.

"If maple sugar is used instead of the sirup, add a little water to the crushed sugar and cook to a sirup."

Maple fritters, caramel cake, maple icing and sugar frosting, and maple sugar pie are all foods that are familiar to the Vermont natives.

Also arriving on the Clipper from Lisbon today will be Bruce Smith, who has been in London on a Red Cross mission for several weeks. Mrs. Smith is in New York to meet him, and the two will return to their apartment at the Mayflower late this afternoon.

ON THE BOOKS: Mrs. Alben W. Barkley will christen the new liner, S. S. President Van Buren, next Thursday at Norfolk, Va. Mrs. Barkley and her party will have breakfast at the Chamberlin Hotel at Old Point Comfort on Thursday morning, motoring from there to the scene of the launching. After the ceremonies, she will be guest of honor at a luncheon at the James River Country Club. . . . Former Senator and Mrs. Harry B. Hawes will be feted at a large dinner Saturday night at the Mayflower Hotel by a group that calls itself the "Committee of Pilgrims, Inauguration Philippines Commonwealth Junket." The group is made up of around 80 persons who attended the inauguration of President Quezon of the Philippines. Former Senator Henry F. Ashurst is in charge of arrangements.

Others on "the commitee" are Senator Tom Connolly, Senator Robert Reynolds, former Senator and Mrs. Edward Burke, former Senator and Mrs. Sherman Minton, Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Representative and Mrs. Ewing Thomason, Maritime Commissioner and Mrs. John J. Dempsey, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja and many more. . . . Admiral and Mrs. Emory S. Land will be guests of honor at the Sunday luncheon Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Stettinius, jr., will give on May 18 at The Horse Shoe, their Virginia home. . . .

CAPITAL SKETCHBOOK: Countess Eleanor Palffy will entertain at dinner Friday night, having among her guests Mrs. William Astor Chanler, of New York, author of "Cleopatra's Daughter." . . . Senator Millard Tydings will campaign for House Candidate Katherine Byron. . . . Mrs. Tydings entertained at a small luncheon yesterday for her stepmother, Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, who recently returned from Florida and will be off soon for a month's rest at Hot Springs, Va. Others in Mrs. Tydings' party at the Mayflower were Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt and Mrs. J. Fred Essary. Just try to find a better looking group of women than that. Can't be done. . . . Mrs. Edward Eicher, wife of the Securities and Exchange commissioner, had among guests at her luncheon yesterday Mrs. Glasgow Reynolds, the former Nancy duPont, of Wilmington, Del., who is the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lacey Reynolds. . . . The rector of St. John's, the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, and Mrs. Glenn, will entertain at dinner tonight in honor of the latter's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Harper Sibley, who formerly lived here. . . . Harry B. Hewes, of New Orleans, will arrive in Washington on Monday to visit his son, Clarence Hewes, and to attend the Chamber of Commerce meeting. Mr. Hewes will give a dinner in honor of his father on Wednesday evening.

WHISPERS—AND DRUMBEATS: One of Washington's most punctilious official hostesses is Mrs. Claude Pepper; so guests attending a recent dinner at the Argentine Embassy could hardly believe their eyes when they walked to the table and saw two vacant seats—reserved, incidentally, for Senator and Mrs. Pepper. The Senator was finally reached by telephone and appeared on the scene very late. Mrs. Pepper, it seems, had been in Florida for several days; had failed to send in a "regret" for herself and had forgotten to tell him that he was invited. . . . Another who had a place at the table and turned up missing was Senator Richard B. Russell, of Georgia. I don't know what happened to him.

SENORITA BEATRIZ TONO

The Commercial Attache of the Colombian Embassy, Augusto Tono de la Espriella and Senora Carmela Martinez de Tona, announce the engagement of their daughter, Senorita Beatriz Tono, to Lieut. William Lawrence Brantley, U. S. N., son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brantley, of Oregon.

The wedding will take place on May 31 at 5 o'clock in the afternoon at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament in Chevy Chase.

In keeping with the Colombian custom, the bride-elect has chosen two maids of honor. They will be Senorita Elena Castro, daughter of the Minister of El Salvador and Senora de Castro, and Senorita Anna Maria Velez, of Carta Jena, Colombia, who is a house guest of the Toros.

The four bridesmaids will be Miss Margaret Logan, Miss Gloria Riemer, Senorita Bianca Vargas, daughter of the First Secretary of the Colombian Embassy and Senora de Vargas, and Senorita Leonor Tono, sister of the bride-to-be.

Senorita Tono was educated in convents in her homeland, attended Holly wood High School in Hollywood, Calif., and was graduated from Wilson High School here. Lieut. Brantley was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1937 and from the Naval Aviation School in Pensacola, in February.

After their wedding trip the couple will make their home in Norfolk, Va., where Lieut. Brantley is stationed.

THE CLIFFORD PINCHOTS still entertain on the prohibition regime which they adopted when Mr. Pinchot was Governor of Pennsylvania and alcohol was illegal. But, as one of their guests remarked the other day at luncheon, Mrs. Pinchot has such a fine chef that one really prefers to concentrate on the food, anyway. The meal that day began with delicious cold trout in jelly and continued through roast fowl and a salad course to compote of fresh fruit which Mrs. Pinchot, with a bow to king alcohol, had spiked with delicious brandy. Even the bread was noteworthy, being a hot brioche loaf served whole on a wooden tray and baked in the form of a plait so that you simply broke off a piece without spoiling the hot bread with a knife.

Mrs. Pinchot said that she had put a slight crack in the hard shell of Washington protocol by inviting two guests of equal rank, a Justice of the Supreme Court and a Minister of a legation, and that, in such case, the foreigner within our gates takes precedence. The guests of honor, Justice Hugo Black and the Swiss Minister, proved a most successful combination and protocol received its final blow when Mr. Pinchot, after luncheon, urged the gentlemen to compromise with the heat and remove their jackets. Mme. Bruggmann and Mrs. Black looked smart and cool, the former in a navy and white print and the latter in sheer dark blue, and both removed their hats by way of encouraging the gentlemen who were shy of the coatless vogue.

A GAY COCKTAIL party was given the other afternoon by Frank Oliver, whose apartment boasts a balcony which was the favorite gathering spot for his guests. Mr. Oliver lived in China for a number of years and has many associations with that fascinating land. Among his guests the other day was the Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih, and his Counselor, Mr. Liu Chieh. The Second Secretary of the Embassy, Mr. Keinwen Yu, was accompanied by Mrs. Yu, a real beauty, who wore native Chinese dress.

Also present was Mrs. Nelson Johnson, whose husband, formerly U. S. Ambassador to China, is now Minister to Australia, Mr. and Mrs. David Wills, M. and Mme. Jean Baube, Countess de Garmont, Mr. and Mrs. Robert T. Pell, Denys Smith, Edward Weintal and Herbert Elliston.

MR. AND MRS. Snowden Fahnestock have returned from New York, where they attended the wedding of Mr. Fahestock's cousin, Martha Michalis, to Peter Hare, of Philadelphia. The wedding took place in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion with flowering branches and spring flowers.

While the Fahnestocks were in New York they were houseguests of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt at the famed Vanderbilt mansion. Though the house has recently been sold to business interests, Mrs. Vanderbilt is finishing out the season there before the famous landmark is made another victim to progress.

Snodwen Fahnestock, whose daughter, Fontaine, is soon to be married to Warwick Stabler, an army officer, is giving the young couple some very practical advice. He is urging them to invest some of their wedding check in a house trailer, which they can park near Mr. Stabler's camp and thus be sure of a house wherever military peregrinations may lead them.

ANTHONY RUMBOLD, Second Secretary of the British Embassy, has flown to London by Clipper. It is Mr. Rumbold's first leave since the outbreak of war and the object of his trip is to visit his father, Sir Horace Rumbold, who is ill. Sir Horace and Lady Rumbold were very popular in Washington when they visited their son and daughter-in-law here a few years ago. Sir Horace was for a number of years Great Britain's Ambassador to Spain.

Lippmanns Give Tea in Honor Of Mrs. Davis

The Georgetown home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann, where once Alexander Graham Bell lived and had a laboratory, was the scene of a tea party yesterday. Guest of honor, and lokoing very dashing in the new Red Cross uniform, was Mrs. Dwight Davis, director of Volunteer Services.

Elizabeth Hawes designed the new uniforms and they are far more becoming than very practical costumes usually are. Mrs. Davis laughed when complimented on her peaked cap, and said that she had been compared to everyone from a train conductor to a coal miner.

The hostess was also in uniform. Mr. Lippmann was present to see that the men among the Red Cross officials didn't get lonesome. Iced tea and punch were served in the dining room, with its walls painted a soft green. The table was centered with a silver compote and four silver candlesticks.

Among the guests were Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Mrs. Thomas Claggett, Mrs. Grace Eustis, also in the new uniform; Miss Maxine Davis, Mrs. Arthur Krock and her mother, Mrs. Alfred Granger, and several more.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

WITH OR WITHOUT cherry blossoms — Washington is the magnet for out-of-towners these days.

"Everybody I know in New York wants to come down here," said Mrs. Albert Dewey yesterday. A young lawyer was remarking that all his friends were eager for jobs in Washington now. Another person was moaning that, owing to the housing shortage, her landlady is about to build a house in the garden behind the residence where she has an apartment. "There won't be a strip of land left before long," she sighed.

Mrs. Dewey expects to provide bed and board for a series of New York friends who will come down this spring for a stay. Prince and Princess Scherbatow arrived yesterday for a visit and with the Deweys attended a dinner given last night by Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock. Mrs. Dewey, who has just returned after a stay in New York, will entertain at a small dinner for the Scherbatows tonight. He is a Russian, now an American citizen, and the Princess was born in this country.

THE OTHER DAY, in Richmond, Va., Miss Isabelle Kemp stepped into a taxi and told the driver to keep going until they got to Washington. Miss Kemp had alighted hurriedly and firmly from a plane after a rough ride and a taxi seemed the best way to get here at the time. She has been visiting Mrs. Raymond Lee, wife of Gen. Lee, at their home in Georgetown.

Miss Kemp is one of the many American refugees from Europe. For 14 years she lived in Rome, Paris and London. Her cousin is Gen. "Mike" Scanlon, our Air Attache at the London Embassy, and through him she met the Lees. Before the fall of France Miss Kemp ran a canteen near St. Augustin, feeding between 200 and 300 refugees a day. She also took over an old school, covered the floors with straw, and served meals to unemployed French people.

"We've always thought of the French as a material people chiefly interested in the sock filled with money," she says. "But many of the unhappy people I fed had fled, taking as their only baggage a pet which they couldn't bear to leave behind. I will never forget one little boy whose only possession left was his rather unhealthy looking pigeon, from which he refused to be parted." Miss Kemp is now working in New York on a relief project for French children. She reports that Miss Anne Morgan, whose Friends of France was going strong before that country fell, is now concentrating on helping French prisoners in Germany.

Miss Kemp has nothing but kind words for the French people themselves, and couldn't feel more strongly that their politicians are terrible.

COUNT POTOCKI, former Polish Ambassador, stepped into the Mayflower dining room the other day for a quick lunch. He is back in Washington after a stay in Sun Valley and expects to leave in May for Peru, his wife's home. He doesn't yet know whether or not he will be Polish Ambassador there, as has been widely rumored.

British War Relief Will Open Overcoat Drive Here Today

Asking "not one cent in contribution" but all the men's overcoats that can be spared. The overcoat committee of the British War Relief, Inc., goes into action in the Capital today.

Miss Suzanne Rosenberg, of New York, chairman of the national committee, has come to Washington to launch the campaign, which is to be sponsored by an outstanding group of Washington women. "Every overcoat we can get will be sent directly to England," Miss Rosenberg said. She explained further that they would be used by the civilian defense corps, which includes men who are too old to fight but who patrol the roads at night and guard public buildings and homes.

The procedure of contributing overcoats is simple. It's merely a matter of lifting the telephone receiver and calling NA-5100. Trucks will be sent out immediately to pick up the overcoats which are to be packed at the Hecht Co. and sent from there. Since Miss Rosenberg took over chairmanship of the committee, 45,000 overcoats have been collected in 15 different cities. Many more are needed.

Members of the Washington committee include Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. Chauncey Parker, jr., Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn, Mrs. Eppes Hawes Moore, Mrs. Kent Legare, Mrs. Albert Dewey, Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker, Mrs. Arthur Fowler, Mrs. Patrick Hill, Mrs. Arthur Krock, Mrs. George Pettengill, Mrs. Hennen Jennings, Mrs. Shaw Parker, Mrs. Walter Lippmann, Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, Mrs. Sherman Miles and Mrs. David Finley.

Espils Plan Fete For Argentina's Foreign Minister

An addition to the procession of distinguished South American visitors will be the Argentine Foreign Minister and Senora de Ruiz Guinazi. They will arrive in Washington May 1, on an official visit, nearly every minute of which will be devoted to entertaining.

The Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil have selected Friday afternoon, May 16, as the date for a reception in their honor. There's a possibility that the distinguished Minister and wife will be housed in the beautiful Larz Anderson mansion, headquarters of the Society of Cincinnati.

Arriving in Washington a few days ago, Miss Rosenberg is now the guest of the Rev. and Mrs. C. Leslie Glenn at their home on Massachusettts Avenue. Later, she will visit Mrs. Eppes Hawes Moore.

Mary E. Birch Is Married To J. V. Sample

At a quiet ceremony yesterday morning at St. Anne's Church, Miss Mary Ellen Birch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wesley Birch, of this city, was married to John V. Sample, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Sample, of Washington. The Rev. R. A. Phelan officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a navy blue suit with a white blouse and a navy hat. A corsage of white orchids and lilies of the valley completed her costume. Her only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Evelyn Brodie, who wore a toast colored suit, a purple hat, and a cluster of lavender orchids.

Richard Sample was best man for his brother and the ushers were Don Mayburn and the bride's brothers, Howard and Norbert Birch. A breakfast was served at the Broadmoor.

After a honeymoon in New York the couple will live at 2000 Connecticut Avenue. Mr. Sample will be graduated in June from National Law School.

1,500 District Girl Reserves Visit White House on 60th Anniversary

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor

More than 1,500 Washington Girl Reserves, leading the Nation-wide celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of their organization, yesterday visited the White House and later witnessed the cutting of their 100-pound birthday cake at the Y. W. C. A.

The girls, wearing the white dresses and blue ties which are the Girl Reserve uniform, were received for tea at the White House by Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Vice President, in the absence of Mrs. Roosevelt. They were frankly delighted to have the opportunity of being guests there and they filed through the rooms looking with open interest at everything in sight. Several of them, mindful that they would share in their own birthday cake when they returned to the Y. W. C. A., carefully treasured the little cakes they were served at the White House to take home to show their mothers as souvenirs of the occasion.

At 5 o'clock Mrs. Wallace was their guest at the Y. W. C. A. She cut the great birthday cake which was on the stage of Barker Hall. The girls packed the main floor of the hall and the balconies, with standing room only, and gave rousing applause as the Second Lady officiated at the cake cutting. Mrs. Fred S. Buschmeyer, chairman of the girl reserve executive committee, lighted the 60 blue candles on it.

Mary Grace Ryan, president of the Girl Reserve Interclub Council, introduced Mary Elizabeth Ryon, vice president and secretary, who presented Mrs. Wallace with a pin which made her an honorary member of the organization. The two girls, their names pronounced alike but spelled differently, looked enough alike to be sisters. Mrs. Wallace, in a brief speech, expressed her thanks and appreciation of the tribute.

Songs by the Girl Reserve Glee Club also contributed to the program, and a message from President Roosevelt, greetings from Mrs. Roosevelt and her regrets at not being able to attend the ceremony, as well as a message from Chief Justice and Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, were read by Mrs. Stuart A. Rice, chairman of the anniversary committee.

Birthday greetings were given by Miss Elsa M. Peterson, president of the board of directors of the Washington Y. W. C. A.

Because no room in the Y. W. C. A. was large enough to hold the entire birthday party, it was subdivided into six parts, with a 10-candle portion of the cake going to each celebration center.

When inviting hostesses to these sub-parties, the Girl Reserves, with rare foresight, invited each to bring her own cake knife.

As soon as Mrs. Wallace had finished her cake cutting, sixths of the cake were whisked into a back stage elevator and up to the clubroom. The girls from different high schools gathered in separate groups.

The assistant cake cutters were Miss Peterson, Mrs. Buschmeyer, Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Harold E. Saunders, president of the Girl Reserves Mothers' Council; Miss Elizabeth Haney, general secretary of the Washington Y. W. C. A., and Miss Mabel Charest, its assistant secretary.

The celebration will continue with an Adult Dinner, featuring a discussion on making democracy more vital to youth, at the Wardman Park Hotel tonight, and will conclude with an address at Continental Hall Saturday afternoon by Charles Taft, son of the late President and Chief Justice, to be accompanied by a pageant of gift-giving to the world work of the Y. W. C. A.

Madame Chairman

by Suzanne

AMONG THOSE ATTENDING the annual meeting of the Associate Council of the National Society, U. S. Daughters of 1812, was Mrs E. H. Seabrook, of Jacksonville, Fla., a delegate from her State and historian of the society in Florida.

She came to the Capital with her daughter, Ava Hamilton Singer, who also attended and wore the emblem of the society with a ribbon and gold bars, showing a line of distinguished 1812 ancestors. Curiously enough, many members of the organization who may have looked with interest at the insignia and even may have inquired about the exploits of her ancestors, may not know they have among them one of the greatest women explorers in America.

She is a modest person and, if anyone asked her, she probably would say, "Oh, yes, I have traveled in different parts of the world and I am much interested in color photography." It would require many more questions to draw from her the fact that some of her colored pictures were those she took alone at the mouth of a seething crater in eruption in the heart of the African Continent; of elephants, water buffalo, gorillas and other animals in their native haunts.

I looked at the ribbon with decorations, indicating her ancestors had given gallant service in the War of 1812, and I had respect for what they had done for our country, but it was not by her ancestors that I was most impressed. The fact that she herself was in the canteen service in France and drove an ambulance during the World War seemed more pertinent today. Perhaps she was just carrying on the tradition, but whatever the reason she made her own contribution regardless of those of her ancestors—and, if the present war continues, it will find Mrs. Singer again in Africa, she says. She is not one who is content to sit by without giving service when there is need.

D. A. R. TRIP—Mrs. Frederick K. Sparrow, chairman of historic spots, for the District D. A. R., has announced a series of pilgrimages, sponsored by the historical research committee of which Mrs. Jessie Arnold is chairman. The first tour will be on Friday to Annapolis where Dr. James M. Magruder will join the group and conduct them through the old homes and buildings. At the Naval Academy a special escort will take charge of the party. Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor will receive those making the trip at the historic old Statehouse. This building once served as first Capitol of the United States in 1772. Carvel Hall, where luncheon will be served, was the home of William Paca, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and was built in 1763.

Buses leave D. A. R. Chapter House at 8:45 a. m. and return at 6 p. m.

D. A. R. Card Party

The spring benefit of the Abigail Hartman Rice Chapter, D. A. R., will be a card party, to be held tomorrow at the District chapter house, 1732 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest at 8 p. m. The proceeds will be used to send children of the D. A. R. approved committees to camp this summer.

Industrial Training for Women Urged by Labor Bureau Chief

Industrial defense training for women should be a definite part of our preparedness program in this country, Miss Mary Anderson, director of the Woman's Bureau of the Department of Labor, declared yesterday.

Miss Anderson, speaking on the second of a series of broadcasts sponsored by the Business and Professional Women's Club over station WINX, was interviewed by Mrs. Miller Hickerson, a member of the club's radio committee, on job opportunities for women in connection with defense. She expressed the opinion that there was strong likelihood that women would be needed in coming months for more masculine work. The demand for women in such jobs, she said, would increase as the backlog of unemployed men dwindled and the defense program reached its peak. Industrial defense training now being given to thousands of men is also open to women but, only in an occasional community are they taking advantage of it, she stated.

Miss Anderson urged that women's oragnizations in each community take an interest and make an effort to see that women workers are trained. "They can aid in this way both the women workers and the defense program," she added.

One large arsenal reported 1,600 women employes, said Miss Anderson, and some private plants with large defense contracts report a 50 to 100 per cent increase in the number of women workers within recent months. In addition to such defense production, there are many women in textile, garment and food establishments producing goods for the Army and Navy, she pointed out.

Although the Woman's Bureau does not tell women where to get jobs, as it is not an employment agency, Miss Andersan explained, it can point out big industrial developments in the near future, such as the shell-loading plant in Ravenna, Ohio, which will open in the early summer, giving jobs to 3,000 women—or the bag-loading plant in Dublin, Va., where by October, not far from 2,000 women employes will be needed. To get such jobs, women should go to their local employment offices, she advised.

There is great need for nurses, and the examinations are being held open continuously until further notice, she said. Women in the Army and Navy are chiefly nurses, said Miss Anderson, but they also include dietitians, medical specialists, therapy aides and hostesses in camps. "Perhaps I had better advise none of my listeners to hope for hostess jobs just now," she added. "I understand that for the 100 such jobs recently made available, 10,000 women applied."

Civil service records show, said Miss Anderson, that 41,000 more women were in Uncle Sam's executive offices on December 31, 1940, than at the end of last June.

Members of Delta Delta Delta sorority here are rapidly completing plans for the organization's regional meet, to be held Saturday at College Park, Md.

Delta Delta Delta alumnae members from the District, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina, and collegiate members from Maryland and Duke Universities, and William and Mary and Goucher Colleges, will come together at the one-day conference.

The president national, Mrs. Percy Young Schelly, of Pennsylvania, will appoint a committee to plan the celebration.

Resolutions were passed by the society, urging that no un-American doctrines be allowed to reach the youth of the Nation, either through subversive material in textbooks or the instruction of unpatriotic teachers, and opposing any alliance for this country, such as proposed in "Union Now."

Prizes for the best publicity scrapbooks were awarded by the chairman national, Mrs. Eugene A. Myers. First prize went to New New York State, Mrs. Myrtle M. Lewis, chairman, and second to Pennsylvania, Miss Minnie Marie Atland, chairman.

Mediators Get Potash Dispute

The National Defene Mediation Board yesterday called officials of the American Potash and Chemical Co., of Trona, Calif., and representatives of the striking C. I. O. Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers to meet here for a hearing on Tuesday.

The strike, which has rendered 1,300 workers idle since March 15, was certified to the board during the day by Secretary of Labor Perkins. The company is the most important of the three concerns supplying borax and potash for medical glass and potash salts for explosives, defense officials said.

To Hear Msgr. Haas

The board also called a hearing here Saturday of union and company representatives of the Vanadium Corporation of America, to consider a report of Msgr. Francis J. Haas, of Catholic University, who was designated by the board to make findings of fact on conditions at the company, following a back-to-work agreement negotiated by the board on March 30, ending a strike at the plant.

Board panels will sit here tomorrow in an effort to settle strikes involving 8,000 men at two New Jersey plants of John A. Roebling Sons Co. and at the Buffalo (N. Y.) plant of the American Car & Foundry Co.

Telegrams were sent to the managements and unions involved, requesting that representatives appear. The board has not yet named its mediation panels for the strikes, which were certified to it yesterday.

The work stoppage of 6,500 men at the Trenton and Roebling, N. J., plants, of the Roebling concern has halted for eight days production on control cables for the Army Air Corps.

The American Car & Foundry Co. dispute, involving an A. F. L. Federal Workers Union and the C. I. O.-S. W. O. C., has delayed orders for $6,000,000 worth of shell parts. The dispute is over choice of a collective bargaining agency.

Congressmen Just Grafters to People, Rep. Burdick Says

Representative Burdick (Republican), of North Dakota, told a House Judiciary Subcommittee yesterday the impression throughout the country was that "Congressmen and Senators were, in some degree, a bunch of grafters."

Burdick said he had "set the people straight" about a theory that members of Congress get everything free in the Capital.

He urged the committee to approve his bill to prohibit speechmaking for money by members of Congress, the Cabinet, executive office holders and Federal judges, under penalty of forfeiture of office.

Burdick said Speakers' Bureau advertisements showed that prominent members of both Houses get from $100 to $1,000 for public appearances.

National Cotton Week to Boost Business, Ad Club Is Told

National Cotton Week, May 16-24, will occasion a 25 per cent increase in newspaper advertising over the 1940 event, Charles K. Everett predicted yesterday. The program is part of an effort to reach a goal of 10,000,000 bales annual cotton consumption.

Merchandising director of the Cotton-Textile Institute of New York, Everett addressed the Advertising Club of Washington at the Raleigh Hotel. A number of guests, representing business, the newspapers and other activities, were present to help perfect plans for Washington's participation in the week.

Everett based his prediction about advertising on retail conferences which he has conducted recently in Boston, Greeville, S. C., New Orleans, Atlanta, Dallas, Chicago, Detroit and Houston. He estimated that $3,000,000 will be spent no advertising and promotion.

"Cotton is good news, good sales volume and good public relations," he said. "Because 14,000,000 American men, women and children look to cotton for their livelihood, cotton is invested with a public interest and is, therefore, good editorial copy.

"Those companies whose advertising will feature cotton week will win the gratitude of the Nation's one-tenth who live on cotton."

All media of public information—magazines, newspapers, radio and others—are cooperating to make 1941 national cotton week greater than its ten predecessors, said the speaker.

"This cooperation is welcomed by cotton," he declared. "Only five years ago we apparently were resigned to an annual domestic consumption of 6,000,000 bales. In 1940, consumption exceeded 8,000,000 bales. At present, the mills are operating on a 10,400,000-bale basis.

"While no such consumption figure is to be expected this year, it now appears that the institute's goal of 10,000,000 bales annual consumption is not too distant."

Groups participating in the National Cotton Week movement here include the Washington Board of Trade, Merchants and Manufacturers Association, Better Business Bureau and Washington Automotive Trade Association, as well as the Advertising Club of Washington.

Coal Strike Certified to Mediation Board After Southerners Bolt Parley

tunity to comply with the President's request to reopen the mines."

Shortly after the mines shut down, John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, declared he would not agree to the issues going to the Mediation Board. He criticized what he said was the board's formula of telling strikers to return to work while issues were being discussed, thereby depriving them of their strike advantage. No comment had come from him early today on the certification order.

In announcing withdrawal from the New York conferences last night, L. T. Putman, spokesman for the Southerners, said that the operators, the union and John R. Steelman, Federal conciliation head, were agreed that the situation was "hopelessly deadlocked."

The Southerners, he said, had neither rejected nor complied with Mr. Roosevelt's request and hoped to contact him in Washington today to explain their stand.

Putman said they would make a counter-proposal that the Southern mines reopen, the union accept an offer of an 11 per cent increase in the basic wage for miners—an offer the Southerners made April 3—and continue negotiations on the remaining points.

He declared that when the Southerners returned to the conference, ending an absence lasting since April 11, they found the "same iron-clad demands of union and (Northern) operators that we had been up against for weeks."

When asked whether those demands included abolition of the 40-cent daily wage differential in the Southerners' favor, Putman replied:

"Everything."

Only yesterday, Chairman Truman, of the Senate Defense Investigating Committee, called on Lewis, Putman and Charles O'Neill, of the northern operators to appear before the committee tomorrow if mining operations were not resumed by that time.

Steelman told newsmen the Southerners "had taken upon themselves a grave responsibility" in failing to comply with the President's request.

Meanwhile, two Ohio steel producing centers felt the pinch of a fuel shortage.

Curtailment of coal production forced the closing of a huge blast furnace of the Republic Steel Corporation in Youngstown yesterday, the fourth furnace of the company to go down in Youngstown and Cleveland since the coal dispute began. Republic's production of pig iron will be off 25 per cent of capacity as a result of the latest shutdown. The Youngstown furnace has been producing 1,000 to 1,300 tons of iron a day for the Bessemer plant.

D. C. Vote Is Urged at Senate Inquiry

Women Voters, and Gordon W. Rule, who spoke for the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Ernest F. Henry, director of the District Suffrage Association, disclosed that the organization has dropped its insistence on inclusion of a home-rule provision in the bill. In the interest of promoting national representation, Henry said, association directors have agreed that the language of the resolution should be left up to the subcommittee.

Two Considerations

Pusey told the subcommittee that The Post completely indorses the resolution on "two considerations." The first, he said, is based on a belief that Washington citizens should be given participation in American democracy. The second, he declared, is on the ground that the newspaper's aspirations are for improved Government in Washington.

Pusey declared for National representation and home rule, the latter under charter from Congress. If home-rule proves impossible of attainment, he added, Washington should in any event be given national representation.

He warned, however, that deletion of the self-government clause might be interpreted as a decision by Congress that residents of Washington are not to be entrusted with their own affairs. He declared that "home rule is the basis of democracy," adding:

"Very heavy obligations are in store for the District . . . and we feel that when citizens are called upon to give so much, we should be very careful that fundamental rights should be retained.

Inefficiency Attacked

"Young men who may be sent to fight for democracy certainly should have an opportunity for some experience with democracy."

Pusey described the present Washington "regime" as "neither efficient nor economical," citing the city's health record, its high crime rate and its neglect of welfare institutions.

Waldrop also criticized District government, calling attention to the failure, after seven years of trying, to provide a permanent tax structure.

The Times-Herald political editor raised the Negro question, deliberately, he said, because the subject heretofore has been given the "hush, hush" treatment. He produced a census estimate placing the percentage of Negroes in the District at 28.06 and declared they would vote as intelligently as any group.

"And as for Negroes in public offices, why not?" he asked.

Poll Is Cited

Suter, the Star's specialist in civic affairs, pointed out that his paper has advocated national reresentation for 50 years, recalling a series of articles published in 1888 and written by Theodore W. Noyes, the papers' editor.

Suter said his paper advocates authorization of Congress to delegate self-governing powers to the District, but added that "the Star would not for a minute, press that at the risk of jeopardizing national representation."

A poll of Junior Chamber of Commerce members, Rule said, showed 81 per cent in favor of national representation and a majority for self-government of 53 per cent.

"You sit here and pass laws to aid the democracies of the world . . in a city which is completely without the fundamental right you seek to preserve elsewhere," Rule declared.

William H. Lowder, 1533 Rosedale Street Northeast, directed several questions at Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, who was there as a witness, demonstrating Lowder's opposition to suffrage. One of them was:

"Don't you think you ought to straighten out the District before you give us a vote?"

Passage Predicted

Randolph predicted that "if either the Senate or the House is given the opportunity to vote on this bill it will pass."

Pointing out that the preoccupation of many members of Congress with affairs of their home districts means "cursory study" by them of legislation for Washington, Randolph made a plea for nonpartisan support for the bill.

Only in event that the self-government provision impairs the measure's chances for adoption, should that clause be stricken from the bill, Randolph said. He argued that changes, if necessary, should be made on the Senate floor.

He told the subcommittee that there are 200,000 persons of voting age living in the District who cannot establish franchise elsewhere. Because Washington is the seat of Federal Government, he agreed with Senator McCarran, subcommittee chairman that Congress should retain ultimate control of the municipality.

Senator Harley M. Kilgore (Democrat), of West Virginia, asked if local suffrage might not muddle more than ever District-Federal fiscal relations. Randolph replied:

"I don't know how the fiscal affairs of the District could be any more muddled than they are now."

Coast and Geodetic May Go to Navy

Transfer of Coast and Geodetic Survey from Commerce to Navy is being studied. The shift can be made by Executive order. It's understood that conversations already have been held between officials of the two departments on the proposed transfer.

Coast and Geodetic Survey was placed under Navy during the World War and it's now proposed that it be transferred for the duration of the present emergency. Coast and Geodetic Survey is a commissioned service like Navy. Navy also wants all or a part of Coast Guard and it's understood that an Executive order on the subject is being drawn up.

It has been proposed many times that the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation be taken from Commerce and split up between Navy, Coast Guard and the Maritime Commission. Navy, it's reported, has abandoned claim to the bureau, but Coast Guard is said to still covet it. Legislation would be necessary, however, before the bureau could be touched.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics is sort of a long-range planner for the Agriculture Department. It set up an inter-bureau coordinating committee to look into Rural Electrification Administration policies. The committee is composed of representatives from all Agriculture agencies that have some connection with REA. It started its work by asking REA for a report. The report has been made but it's understood that the committee will reject it. It seems that the report lauded to the skies all REA policies and employes. It's likely that the committee itself will go into REA and make its own report which will be handed to Agriculture Secretary Wickard. Ray Smith is the RAE integrator on the REA report.

Procurement Busy

It hasn't been credited with the work, but Procurement Division has been playing an important part in making effective the Lend-Lease bill. The act earmarked $1,350,000,000 for agricultural products and industrial goods. Agriculture has been assigned the task of buying agricultural products but the largest portion of the money will be used to buy industrial products and Procurement is doing the job.

No new employes have been hired to carry out the huge buying job. The work is being done by the existing organization which has meant long hours of overtime for most officials and a few clerks. Lend-lease buying is being administered by Director Clifton Mack, George Landick, his assistant, and W. N. B. Freeman and A. J. Walsh, division chiefs. A. B. Landgraf is liaison between Procurement and Lend-Lease headquarters. Procurement has ordered its field offices to make a search of surplus goods owned by the Government. Already more than $1,000,000 worth of strategic materials has been found.

Forest Allen, information director at Federal Works Agency, has been called to active Naval service and assigned to the Navy press section . . . Arnold Levy has been appointed acting general counsel of the Bituminous Coal Division. He succeeds Abe Fortas who has been appointed acting director of Interior's new power division . . . If the Army had gotten to him a little earlier—well, it would have been all right. But now Glancy, who is 24, measures 6 feet 8. Military requirements call for men not over 6 feet 7.

Schools Need $56,000 for Defense Shops

The District public school system stood ready yesterday to expand its national defense training program "wherever possible," in response to the call upon the Nation's schools for an immediate all-out training job, made in a joint statement from its own superintendent. Dr. Frank W. Ballou, and 16 other nationally-known educators in Seattle.

Lack of equipment was given as a limitation on the expansion of the District program, by L. J. Cantrell, assistant superintendent of schools, in charge of defense training.

Approximately $56,000 worth of equipment would be needed to bring the shops in present use "up to the full standard of efficiency," Cantrell said.

Although a request for this amount was made of the United States Office of Education, its original appropriation for defense training equipment was exhausted before the District schools' request was reached. The list, it was stated, was arranged in order of urgency.

Still Hope for Fund

Local officials still hope that the amount will be forthcoming from a later appropriation.

Meanwhile, the District system has just ordered $15,000 worth of equipment from a fund provided for the National Youth Administration and out-of-school youth programs. This equipment will be available for other shop classes including the older defense trainees. It includes welding, auto shop, machine shop and sheet-metal equipment. However, this new equipment will not meet even immediate demands.

"At Central High School, the other night, they were running four lathes," Cantrell said. "They could use ten additional lathes. We have ordered only six among this new equipment.

Thirty school shops are now in full-time use, including the midnight-to-8 a. m. class period. There are 67 part time classes for supplementary training.

About 25 other shops in junior and senior schools could be pressed into use, if properly equipped, Cantrell said. For instance, some of them have machinery for only the most elementary training in woodwork, which would fall short of offering an adequate course for defense workers.

Survey Urged

"However, we might make a survey of the schools to determine machines which might be used more advantageously," Cantrell said. "For instance, in an art metal shop there might be a machine which could be used in sheet metal."

On the latest count, 353 defense trainees were taking the full-time courses from midnight to 8 a. m. in District school shops. Supplementary courses, usually from 6 to 10 p. m., are being studied by 528. In addition, 408 are in the out-of-school youth training program and 617 in the NYA training program. Some of the latter are girls taking business courses along with boys training in trades.

Adaptability Saves Jews, Rabbi Asserts

The Jew's ability to assimilate himself has helped him to survive through the centuries, Rabbi Jacob Marcus said yesterday at the second annual Institute on Judaism here.

Rabbi Marcus, professor of Jewish history at the Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, spoke before Catholic, Protestant and Jewish religious leaders at the Washington Hotel. Sharing the program was Rabbi Samuel H. Goldenson, of Temple Emmanuel, New York.

A "cultural blood transfusion" has kept the Jew eternally young, Rabbi Marcus said. This assimilation, he said, has tended to give a restatement of the older values and traditions of the Jewish faith.

In discussing the historic and contemporary aspects of his faith, Rabbi Marcus followed out the purpose of the institute that was founded last year on the recommendation of Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, spiritual leader of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, who was chairman at yesterday's meeting.

Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor of First Baptist Church and former president of the Washington Federation of Churches, presided over the final sessions.

500 Attend District Bible Class Banquet

A sense of individual moral, spiritual and civic responsibility is the heart of a democratic way of life, Dr. T. Guthrie Speers declared last night at the twelfth annual banquet of the District of Columbia Organized Bible Class Association.

Dr. Speers, who is pastor of the Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church of Baltimore, spoke at Calvary Baptist Church before almost 500 men and women from 140 classes of 80 churches in the District, Maryland and Virginia.

He contrasted dictator-controlled lands, where he said a "large number of the people gave up a large share of their personal responsibilities to one man," with a democracy, "where every citizen feels a personal responsibility for the government and the community."

Dr. Speers was introduced by Page McK. Etchison, president of the Bible Association and religious work secretary of the Central Y. M. C. A. George E. Harris, association executive secretary, gave a pep talk for the annual Labor Day weekend association conference.

D. C. Probes Industrial School Riot

Board of Inquiry Unable to Place Blame; 7 Boys Are Witnesses

An all-day hearing yesterday, into the riot Tuesday night at the Industrial Home School resulted in no charge being lodged against any of the juvenile participants or the supervisor who was involved.

"We found there was no single individual on whom blame might be placed," said Robert E. Bondy, director of public welfare, at the conclusion of the seven-hour hearing, held in the Seventh Precinct Police Station.

Headed by Bondy, the board of Inquiry included Capt. Clarence Talley, precinct commander; A. J. Driscoll, member of the Board of Public Welfare, and Conrad van Hyning, assistant welfare director.

The investigators heard versions of the riot, in which no one was seriously injured and property damage was "less than $100," from seven of the 14 boys who were taken into custody and the policemen who were called to the Wisconsin Avenue reform school Tuesday night to quell the outbreak.

Three of the seven received hospital treatment, two for hand cuts and the third for a broken finger. Another inmate, who was not summoned to testify, was treated for a neck injury at Gallinger Hospital.

The board of inquiry also questioned Earle W. Cassie, superintendent of the Industrial Home School, and Eugene Lindner, a supervisor, who had submitted his resignation but who was on duty when the riot began in the dining room, then spread to the boys' dormitories.

Bondy said he will make a full report on the incident to the Board of Public Welfare at its next regular meeting on Monday, at which time the board will consider Lindner's resignation. Meanwhile, the supervisor will not be on duty, the welfare director declared.

"The outbreak" he said, "arose out of a combination of circumstances. First, we know that residential Wisconsin Avenue (the institution is in the 2400 block) is not a proper location for such a school.

Low Pay for Staff

"Second, we have had a hard time staffing the school properly. The pay is low and there are many more attractive opportunities open to young men who are needed as supervisors."

Bondy pointed out that the District's 1942 budget estimates include a $70,000 item for acquisition of land on which to build a "welfare center" where the Industrial Home Schools for white and colored, the Home for the Aged and the National Training School for Girls would be situated.

The home school for colored and the Home for the Aged adjoin each other at Blue Plains, in Anacostia, and the girls' school (both white and colored) is on Conduit Road. All four institutions are housed in old, outmoded plants.

Of the 14 youths withdrawn from the industrial school after the riot was quelled, 12 spent Tuesday night at the Receiving Home and two at the Seventh Precinct Station. Seven were returned to the Wisconsin Avenue institution yesterday morning and the other seven were retained as witnesses. Last night they, too, went back to the home school.

At the conclusion of the hearing, which was continuous from 10 a. m. to 6:45 p. m., except for a luncheon recess, Bondy and Van Hyning went to the institution to inspect damage. Earlier, the welfare director said he was informed it would not exceed $100.

Warned on "Jitterbugging"

All participants and witnesses to the outbreak agreed that it began when one boy inmate, cautioned against "jitterbugging" at a dance which was in progress, was sent to Superintendent Cassie's office and some of his friends feared he would be punished.

Four of them dashed into the office and simultaneously chairs began to fly and windows to shatter in the dining room and dormitories.

The girl dancers included most of the 35 female inmates in the institution. Eighty-six boys, the oldest 18, are on the reform school's roster. About 50 of them figured in the melee, it was estimated.

Driver in Fatal Accident Held On Negligent Homicide Charge

One person was killed and five others were injured yesterday in two accidents involving concrete mixing trucks.

After deliberating 2 hours and 40 minutes—the longest period on record in a traffic inquest—a coroner's jury late yesterday held Carl M. Ercoli, 22, of 1213 Thirtieth Street Northwest, under the Negligent Homicide Act in connection with the death of Robert Cleveland Wayland, 27.

Wayland, whose home address had not been determined last night, was crushed under the wheels of a loaded cement-mixing truck at New Hampshire Avenue and M Street Northwest, shortly after 7 a. m. yesterday. The coroner, for the first time in recent years, ordered an inquest the same day.

Victim Hurled 33 Feet

It was testified that the victim—the twenty-seventh traffic fatality this year—was walking north on New Hampshire Avenue and was crossing M Street in the crosswalk. The truck was traveling east on M Street and the driver was preparing to turn north into New Hampshire Avenue Northwest.

Force of the impact knocked Wayland 33 feet, police reported, before the heavy vehicle ran over his body. Ercoli told Lieut. William J. Liverman, of the accident prevention unit, that he saw Wayland 30 feet away, but was unable to stop.

Mixer Was Backing

Five persons were slightly injured and midafternoon traffic was congested yesterday when a streetcar collided with a concrete-mixing truck, tearing the front from the car and overturning the truck.

Police reported the concrete mixer, driven by Michael W. Donahue, 29, of 2404 Minnesota Avenue Southeast, was backing across Independence Avenue in the 600 block to unload on a street-widening project. The streetcar, operated by Leroy S. White, 39, of 451 Burlington Place Northwest, plowed into the truck, laying it on its side.

Treated for cuts and bruises were White and four passengers, Lucy Moore, 72, 3036 M Street Southeast; Ruth Van Pelt, 11, 1006 South Carolina Avenue Southeast; Mildred Feldman, 29, 1521 Twenty-eighth Street Southeast, and Edna Kelos, 38, 27 E Street Northwest.

At a second traffic death inquest yesterday, James R. Reid, 18, of Brookmont, Md., also was held for police Court action under the negligent homicide act in connection with the death of Leon Thomas, colored, 8, of 1566 Thirty-third Street Northwest.

Died on Same Day

The child was struck in the 3600 block of M Street Northwest last Sunday and died the same day in Georgetown Hospital.

Reid, Lieut. Liverman testified at the Morgue, identified himself at the time of the accident as William S. Hart. Shortly before the inquest convened, Liverman told the jury, the youth admitted his real name was Reid and that he had borrowed a driving permit from William S. Hart, a friend.

More Girls Than Men?

The Census Bureau yesterday confirmed what every Washington girl knows: there are more females here than males. Precisely, the bureau found, there are 91.1 men for every 100 women.

Another fact collected by the bureau is that the colored population here is increasing at a faster rate than the white population. Colored residents in 1940 consisted of 28.6 perecent of the population against 27.3 per cent in 1930.

This Is a Concrete Fact

District Chapter of Organists Please Large Recital Audience

D. C. Chapter American Guild of Organists presents Winifred Chamberlain and Florence E. Reynolds in recital Wednesday night in Washington Chapel of Latter Day Saints. Program of music by Bach, Karg, Clokey, Yon, Widor, Barnes, James, Vierne and Reger.

Continuing its second spring festival of recitals, the local chapter of the American Guild of Organists delegated two of its younger members to share a program last evening in the Washington Chapel of Latter Day Saints. The players were Winifred Chamberlain, assistant organist of St. Gabriel's Catholic Church, and Florence E. Reynolds, organist of Brookland Methodist Church, each of whom included two American composers in her offerings. A capacity audience accorded the musicians an attentive hearing unbroken by applause, a procedure conducive to undisturbed enjoyment.

BROWN

The traditional beginning with Sebastian Bach fell to the lot of Miss Chamberlain, who played the C major prelude and fugue, and two of the chorale preludes: "Jesus, My Joy" and "Beloved Jesus, Here We Stand." Her readings were technically clean and effectively registered, although a little lacking in color and verve. More animation and tonal variety were shown in her performance of a chorale-improvisation by Sigfrid Karg, the versatile German pianist and organist, who expanded his name to Karg-Elert for purposes of euphony. No composer for the organ since Bach has displayed more ingenuity in harmony and counterpoint than Karg, and his 66 chorale improvisations, not to mention his other works for the instrument, are a mine for the recitalist.

American composers chosen by Miss Chamberlain were Joseph Waddell Clokey and Pietro Alessandro Yon. The former was represented by two impressionistic sketches, "Wind in the Pine Trees" and "Canyon Walls," and the latter by his clever "Echo" piece. Closing the first part of the program was the striking intermezzo from Widor's sixth symphony.

Miss Reynolds placed American composers first in her share of the joint recital. Edward Shippen Barnes showed the results of his study with Vincent d'Indy and Louis Vierne in the excellent workmanship of his "Petite Suite," consisting of a prelude, pastorale, meditation and finale. The suite is notable for thematic invention and skillful utilization of dynamic stops. Philip James was represented by a piece which has become justly popular with organists in his native land, the "Meditation in the Church of St. Clotilde," wherein quotations from the Frank symphony pay tribute to the master who presided for many years at the console in that house of worship.

For her remaining numbers Miss Reynolds played two contrasting pieces by Vierne, the picturesque "Cortege" and a "Madrigal" of delightful delicacy, and Max Reger's brilliant toccata.

The festival will close Saturday night with a recital by Conrad Bernier, organist of Catholic University, who will play music by Bach, Franck, Guy Roparjz, Gustave Samazeuilh, Charles Quef, Deane Shure, Albert Roussel and Louis Vierne.

Renovation Seen a Need Of Democracy

Democracy must be renovated if its enemy, totalitarianism, is to be overthrown in this war, speakers told the seventh conference of Teachers of International Law and Related Subjects yesterday at the Brookings Institution.

It will take "democratic dynamism" to win "this war of factories," with democracy the means as well as the end of victory, declared Max Lerner, former editor of the Nation, and now professor at Williams College.

Neither Great Britain nor the United States can defeat Hitler unless they build a "military machine within an economic machine," he asserted. Democratic concepts must be changed to rest on a basis of "dynamic coordination," he said.

Dr. Clyde Eagleton, of New York University, told the conference that democracy, as now practiced, is "irresponsible," and unless its faults are corrected "we shall not for long have a democracy."

Dr. Eagleton joined Dr. Charles G. Fenwick, of Bryn Mawr College, speaker at the opening session, in advocating establishment of an international organization to restore law and order to the world and create a more sound basis for international relations.

Unless that can be done, said Dr. Fenwick, "the tremendous efforts we are now making will be of little avail. . . . Our task is not to stave off the danger immediately confronting the country, but to prevent ultimate defeat in the years to come."

Said Dr. Eagleton: "If democracy turns to international organization as its salvation, it must make that international organization work; and it cannot work unless the machinery of domestic government is geared into the machinery of international government."

In conjunction with the three-day conference, the thirty-fifth annual meeting of the American Society of International Law will open today with Secretary of State Hull presiding.

Special Board To Mediate G. M. Dispute

By the Associated Press

Detroit, April 23.—Michigan's Democratic Governor, Murray D. Van Wagoner, appointed a special commission today to mediate the contract dispute between General Motors Corporation and the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.) and precipitated an argument with Republican members of the State labor mediation board.

Calling for the resignations of Walter Moers and Arthur E. Raab, who represent a majority on the three-man board, the Governor accused them of "obstructionism" and "popping off" against his administration.

"I ask you both to resign," he told the two men in an interview.

"Well, we're not going to do it," they replied in unison.

Raab told the Governor he "resented" the executive's statements.

"Go ahead and resent them," the Governor retorted.

The dispute between Van Wagoner and the two mediation board members followed the action of Raab and Moers in calling upon the union for 30 days notice of intention to strike in General Motors plants. The Governor termed the action "premature." The State Labor Act requires 30 days notice of a strike call in plants engaged in defense work or five days where defense work is not involved.

The union, which is conducting a strike vote in 61 corporation plants in the United States, has said it will not call out any defense workers. An announcement by the corporation today said that it averaged 299,549 hourly and salaried workers during the first quarter of this year. It has more than $700,000,000 in defense contracts.

The special commission appointed by the Governor to work for an agreement between the union and corporation is composed of Thomas J. Donahue, chairman of the State mediation board, and a Democrat; Kenneth M. Burns, Detroit bank cashier, and Dr. Henry H. Crane, pastor of the Central Methodist Church of Detroit.

Demands of the union include a 10-cent hourly wage increase; union shop recognition, enlarged powers for the labor umpire now provided for in the contract with General Motors, and approval for a revsed shop steward system.

2 Famous Texas Cowboy Dance Teams Coming to Folk Festival

ANSON COWBOY FIDDLE BAND

Two famous groups of Texas cowboy dancers, prize-winning exponents of all of the traditional square and heal-and-toe dances, will appear on programs of the National Folk Festival in Washington next week.

They are the Stamford square dance team, winners on April 5 of the coveted Sand Hills Hereford prize, and the Cowboys' Christmas Ball from Anson, which appeared in the sixth annual festival in 1939. Neither team has been in Washington since.

Final arrangements for the trip from Texas were completed this week. Miss Lou Williams, slight and vivid figure of a dancer, is leader of the Stamford group, and C. W. Bartless heads the Anson team. Both groups not only present the old, swift and exceedingly intricate dances, but they invest the performance with some of the drama of the days when dancing was the chief diversion through untold miles of "cow country."

The Cowboys' Christmas ball has been maintained with an almost unbroken line since that Saturday preceding Christmas in 1885 when M. G. Rhoads, operator of Anson's "Lone Star Hotel," hit upon the idea for a grand ball to attract all of the cowhands of the region. History and poetry alike report that it did, and Larry Chittenden's famous ballad "The Cowboys' Ball" dates to about this period. This 72-line opus has been called the finest cowboy lyric ever penned.

For almost as many years, the Stamford cowboys' reunion has attracted old timers from all parts of Texas, and to the rodeo and the sessions for tall tales, the dancing for prizes has been a principal feature. The attire of the dancers has not changed much; they wear the soft boots, Stetson hats, bright colored shirts of checks, and cowboy handkerchiefs, while the women dancers dress in the flowing skirts modeled after fashions of by-gone years.

Fate of Overton Formula May Be Decided Today

The fate of the Overton formula to establish a permanent fiscal relationship between the District and the Federal Government may be decided today in a meeting of the House District Committee.

The formula, aimed at ending the annual controversy over the share of municipal expenses to be borne by the United States, would base the Federal payment to the city on the ratio of Federal-owned land to the area of the District. If applied to 1942 budget estimates, it would increase the payment by more than $3,000,000.

To explain to committee members the financial "plight" of the city due to the defense emergency, the District Commissioners have been asked to attend the meeting, Chairman Randolph announced last night.

Randolph said he expected the full membership of the committee to be present at 10:30 a. m. and added that he hoped the issue would be decided, at least as far as the committee is concerned, by a vote.

Senator John Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, the formula's author, will be present to explain how it will operate, as amended to require expenditures for capital improvements in the District of a sum "at least" equal to the Federal payment.

The formula, as amended, has been promised the backing of President Roosevelt.

A calendar of other Congressional action this week on District legislation:

Today—District Alley Dwelling Authority officials and Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech to meet with special District subcommittee on a bill to empower the authority to eliminate slums outside inhabitated alleys, District committee, 10 a. m.

Tomorrow—Subcommittee headed by Representative Dan McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, to conduct hearings on small loan bill, House Claims Committee room, 10:30 a. m.

Tomorrow — National Defense Subcommittee to hear representatives of Congress of Industrial Organizations in continuance of rent-control bill hearings, House District Committee room, 10 a. m.

Lee Backs Reynolds As Military Chairman

Senator Lee (Democrat), Oklahoma, member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee and of the Senate Democratic Steering Committee, said in a statement yesterday he was in favor of "following precedent and electing Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, as chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

"It would be a mistake to change this well established precedent because a ranking member might not agree with all of our views," said Lee.

Editors Hear McNutt Stress Defense Duty

By the Associated Press

New York, April 23.—The responsibilities of the Nation's editors and publishers in the defense emergency were stressed at today's session of the American Newspaper Publishers Association convention.

Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security administrator, told the convention that America must rely on editors and publishers "to move America fast enough to do the job," while John S. McCarrens, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, A. N. P. A. president, emphasized that while he was aware of the publishing problems "in these latter tragic days of the world, there is for all of us but one paramount problem, and that is how to be of the greatest help to our country.

McNutt described the development of the Social Security program and its allied activities and said that "today Social Security facilities are serving the Nation in defense."

He said the remaking of American life in the last 40 years had resulted because "America chose changes partly because your columns—news and advertising columns—persuaded them."

"In this historic hour a great responsibility is in your hands," McNutt continued. "It is a responsibility for balanced judgment and public service and dispassionate honesty . . . but American newspapers will meet these grave responsibilities."

McCarrens declared that "like soldiers seasoned and finely trained for the supreme effort, the newspapers of America do not await, but go boldly forth to meet the challenge of the day."

"We pledge 'our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor' wholeheartedly in the service of our country," he said. "We will advance its interest. At the minimum this means the creation in America of the greatest army, navy and air force in the world. If it means more, so be it. We shall be in the van."

The afternoon session, at which McNutt spoke, was under the auspices of the A. N. P. A. Bureau of Advertising. The delegates heard reports from Edwin S. Friendly, business manager of the New York Sun, chairman of the bureau of advertising; William A. Thomson, director of the bureau of advertising, and George Benneyan, bureau research and promotion manager.

The venerable owner-manager of the Athletics, master of the mild expletive, said "By George this is going to be an interesting pennant race."

POVICH

Under the rafters of Shibe Park, where a built-in cubicle served as his office, Mr. Mack sat at his desk and tugged at the high stiff collar of the Gay Nineties era that is his sartorial badge. "Goodness," he said, "I really can't tell what is going to happen to our pennant. I'd say that the team with the best pitching will win. Pitching is more important than it used to be, perhaps because good pitchers are so scarce. I'll have to string along with the team that gets pitching."

The ageless sage of the Athletics within the past year has taken on new reverence in the eyes of baseball men. He has now qualified as the game's No. 1 prophet. It was Mr. Mack, who last spring, shocked his interviewers with the bold prediction that the Yankees would not win the 1940 pennant. At the time, the pennant was being conceded to the New York club which had won four straight World Series, and a movement to break up the Yankees "for the good of the game" was urged.

Mack, however, refused to subscribe to the belief of the Yankees' invincibility and openly predicted that they would not win a fifth straight victory. He wouldn't even rate them the second best club in the league. "I believe," said Mr. Mack simply, "that the Yankees will finish third." Eight months before it happened, Mack hit the bulls-eye.

"During the spring," Mr. Mack was saying today, "I began to believe that the Yankees would win this year's pennant, but I believe I was a little too hasty about that. They are gambling very much on their new infield. That little Rizzuto at shortstop is a fine player, but I'm not convinced that their second baseman is a big leaguer yet. Mercy, but they are lucky with Gomez. I never thought he could come back, but the day he pitched against us he showed us a lot of his old stuff. The biggest improvement in the Yankees may be none of these changes they've been talking about. The biggest improvement could very easily be Gomez's return to pitching form.

His own team Mack describes as "very interesting." Said Mack: "I feel quite bad that we do not have the pitching this year. For the first time in several seasons, I have a fine infield. That fellow Pete Suder at third base simply can't miss being a fine big leaguer, and I do believe Dick Siebert, my first baseman, is just about the best in the league although somehow he hasn't gotten that kind of publicity. Gracious, Siebert is a good ball player. He plays fine ball every day—not like some of these stars who have good streaks and bad ones."

If there is any regret by Mr. Mack over his $45,000 expenditure for Benny McCoy, he does not tip it off. "He's not a great second baseman, but he's good enough, and his hitting makes him a fine asset. We always suspected that he was a good hitter, and now we know it. On a team that lacks pitching, he's valuable because of his punch."

A gleam came into the old gentleman's eye when he talked of his right fielder, Edward Trowbridge Collins, jr. "Now isn't he a fine young man and a promising ball player?" Mr. Mack asked in the tone of a man presenting his son for approval. "I didn't try to be sensational when I told newspapermen recently that I thought young Collins would be a better ball player than his father. I told Eddie Collins himself, the same thing the other day when I saw him and I'm sure he wasn't angry with me. No father can take exception to anything in praise of his son and Eddie only smiled and said he hoped I was right."

Young Collins has many of the attributes of his famous dad, in fact. He's as fast, if not faster than was Eddie, and he has something of his father's left-handed crouch at the plate. He also owns his dad's only flaw—a not strong throwing arm. That's why he isn't an infielder. Mr. Mack thinks he can be taught the long outfield throw better than the sharp infield throw.

"You know Eddie Collins never had a great arm or even a good one," said Mr. Mack. "He came up to me as a shortstop, but I had to take him away from that long throw across the diamond. Second base was his only chance to stay in the big leagues and he learned how to play second. Gracious, but he learned how to play. I knew he would be a good hitter when I sent him in to pinch hit one day against Walter Johnson and he hit a triple to center field the first time he ever saw Johnson's fast ball. Eddie's boy is going to be a nice hitter, too. Goodness, won't that be fine?"

Race Horse Doping—Whys and Wherefores

Lexington, Ky., April 23.—Before leaving for this stronghold of the thoroughbred (where, incidentally, the practice of doping seems to be pursuing the even tenor of its way), we paid a visit to the laboratory wherein the New York State Racing Commission chemists wage their eternal war on the criminals who inject narcotics and other stimulants into thoroughbreds in the hope of (1) making them run faster or, (2) making them run slower.

CONSIDINE

It was an interesting excursion, though much of what was going on in the test tubes was over our head. Suffice to say, however, that the full force of science has been thrown against the crooks who at one time threatened to ruin the racing game by making of it a contest between one kind of dope formula vs. another kind of dope formula, instead of horse vs. horse.

The saliva test, which we watched from beginning to end, starts when a commission doctor or chemist permits a race horse which has just won a race to bite on a piece of medicated gauze—inserted into its mouth on the end of a long syringe. The gauze is then taken out, sealed in a kind of Mason jar, and mailed to the laboratory, where all the magic and mysticism of medicine begins to be exerted upon it. .....

The moisture is removed from the still-wet gauze. The gauze is then rinsed into alcohol baths, to extract everything else from it. This matter is put in test tubes and evaporated, which leaves a filmy residue which in turn is evaporated more and more until it is little more than a stain on the bottom of the last small evaporation cup.

From there it is handed to another chemist who scrapes the film off

Gomez Is Winning Pitcher; Third Loss In Row for Boston; Joe DiMaggio Hitless

By the Associated Press

New York, April 23.—Rookie Phil Rizzuto, the little shortstop who has become the sparkplug of the reorganized New York Yankees, pounded a home run behind George Selkirk's pinch single in the eleventh inning today for a 4-to-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

It was the third straight setback for the Sox, who won their first five games at the start of the season, and as a result they slipped back to a tie for first place with the Cleveland Indians.

Until Rizzuto's climactic drive into the left-field stands the game had been a tight pitching duel between the veteran Lefty Gomez and Rookie Charley (Broadway) Wagner, who spent last summer at Louisville in the American Association.

Both pitchers went the whole distance, Wagner giving nine hits, fanning four and walking five, while Gomez, in obtaining his second straight triumph, spaced 11 safeties, struck out seven and walked eight.

Rizutto also tallied the Yanks' first run, beating out a bunt in the first inning, moving to second as Red Rolfe walked, advancing to third on a sacrifice and scoring on a long fly by Joe DiMaggio, who went hitless for the second successive day.

The Red sox tied the count in the fourth on two ringing doubles by Jimmie Foxx and Manager Joe Cronin, but the Yanks bounced right back into the lead in their half of the same inning. Charley Keller walked, stole second as Joe Gordon struck out and continued on to third as Catcher Frank Pytlak threw the ball into centerfield. He scored on an infield out.

Boston again tied the score in the fifth on a pair of walks to Lou Finney and Fox, a long fly by Cronin and a single by Bob Doerr. Jim Tabor also singled in this frame to fill the bases, but Gomez escaped without further damage.

Hank Greenberg Gets Army Call, To Report May 7

By the Associated Press

Detroit, April 23.—Henry Greenberg, reputed to be baseball's highest paid player, was ordered today to report for Army duty May 7 at 6:30 a. m. under the Selective Service Act.

The Big Tiger slugger will start his year's service on the same day that the Detroit team, which won the 1940 American League pennant largely through his efforts, will hoist the flag in ceremonies at Briggs Stadium.

Greenberg's salary for 1941 has been rumored to be $50,000. He was adjudged the most valuable player in the American League last year, and his loss will force the Tigers to alter their strategy materially. Greenberg plays leftfield and bats in the clean-up position.

Bucky Walters Blanks Cubs For Reds, 5-0

By the Associated Press

Chicago, April 23. — Manager Jimmy Wilson of the Chicago Cubs was the victim today of his own celebrated talent as a sound baseball teacher.

The Cub pilot stood on the third base coaching line and watched Bucky Walters—a mediocre third baseman before Wilson turned him into a pitcher—hurl the Cincinnati Reds to a 5-to-0 victory.

It was the Reds' second straight shutout over the Cubs.

Wilson converted Walters into a pitcher when both played for the Phillies, Bucky since becoming one of the league's top hurlers. Only two Cubs reached third base, one on a wild pitch and another on a passed ball.

In taking their fourth straight decision after opening the season with four defeats, the Reds hopped on Rookie Paul Erickson for two runs in the first inning. A walk, two singles and Jim Gleeson's outfield fly produced the tallies.

The Reds added two more in the fifth on an error by Bill Herman, Ival Goodman's triple and another fly by Gleeson. Herman's second error enabled Frank McCormick, who had singled, to score from second. With the final Cincinnati run in the seventh.

Developments Indicate Joe Louis Retirement

Baer Fight Here May Be One of Last Four; Army, Lack of Opposition Among Reasons

By Sid Feder
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, April 23.—The latest reason advanced for the Joe Louis bull market on bashing beaks this year is that the Brown Bomber definitely plans to retire this fall, probably to join the Army.

Joe's "abdication" has been rumored along Jacobs Beach for the past two years, with a good deal of pooh-pooing. But a source who usually knows what's making the fight game tick told this department today that this year is "it."

Because of these plans, it was explained, Joe now is going right through the ranks of challengers, logical and otherwise. He wants to leave his heavyweight house in order, with no question marks concerning his stand on any big fellow with two fists and with as much "sugar" as he's going to need for fried chicken for himself and oats for those horses out there on the Michigan dude ranch.

The whole outline, this source added, hinges on the champion's ability to knock the ears off Buddy Baer, Billy Conn, ample Abraham Simon and determined Lou Nova between now and the time he hangs them up for good. If one of those four should take his title, he probably would try to regain it.

The four fights still to come—Baer in Washington next month and the other three spread out over June, July and September, probably in New York—will give the Bomber a total of eight fights for the year. The four big battles figure to draw in the neighborhood of $600,000, of which Joe's share probably will be just over $225,000.

That sum, with the $76,622.22 he has received from his spring swat tour against Red Burman, Gus Dorazio, Simon and Tony Musto, will produce a "take" of a little more than $300,000 for 1941, the biggest year he's had since 1938, when he collected $376,029, most of it from his second get-together with Max Schmeling.

Naturally, all hands are putting a loud denial on this proposition, as they have in the past. But there are some sound reasons to believe it this time. First, Joe has a low number in the draft and has said he would not ask for deferment. Second, he no longer gets a "kick" out of knocking the other guys' ears down. Third, there would be no other reason, except to walk out with as big a bankroll as possible, for him to take on the "contenders" he has met lately.

Bay Meadows' Double Pays $3,935.20

By the Associated Press

San Mateo, Calif., April 23.—Another rich daily double, returning $3,935.20 for a $2 ticket, was recorded at Bay Meadows today.

The daily double paid $3,610.60 yesterday.

Two turf fans held the winning combination. They were Mrs. Ruth Fakhouri, 29, of Redwood City, Calif., and Louis Taucher, of San Francisco.

Mrs. Fakhouri screamed with excitement when Treasure Isle, the second half of the daily double, won the third race of the day in a photo finish. She said later she just closed her eyes and punched the program in picking her combination.

Taucher declared he "didn't know much about horses" and just picked them because of the number sequence—9 and 10—on the program.

Yippee paid $60.40 to win the second race, coming to the front in the last few yards and winning by a neck. The colt, owned by the B. & B. Stable, of Santa Ana, Calif., was ridden by G. Osborne.

Whirlaway, Our Boots Meet Today

By Bob Considine

Lexington, Ky., April 23.—They'll know a lot more about the Derby chances of Warren Wright's Whirlaway and Mrs. Royce Martin's Our Boots tomorrow evening, for the two crack three year olds will meet in the afternoon in the $10,000 Bluegrass stakes at colorful Keeneland.

Our Boots is now the winter book favorite for the Derby, at 3 to 1. Whirlaway is listed at 4 to 1.

The seventeenth renewal of the mile and a furlong race, won last year by Bimelech, will be a two horse race. Emerson Woodward, Texas horseman, has entered Valdina Groom and Valdina Paul. But the hard boots here tonight were saying that it was just a gesture. No show betting will be accepted at the mutuel windows.

In all likelihood the race will be run in mud. Whirlaway and Our Boots are superior mudders, especially the former. Whirlaway, after disappointing admirers in Florida, has looked good in winning his last two outs.

Our Boots, born and raised, like Whirlaway, in sight of the Keeneland grandstand, has been out only once as a 3-year-old. The Belmont Futurity winner easily won his only out, an overnighter, here last Saturday.

Not since Bubbling Over won the Bluegrass for Col. E. R. Bradley in 1924 has a Bluegrass winner gone on to win the Kentucky Derby. But the race remains the Midwest's outstanding Derby prep.

Our Boots, son of Bull Dog, met Whirlaway four times as a 2-year-old and beat the Wright star three times. Whirlaway won his only victory over Our Boots here last fall in the Breeders Futurity.

Frank Hayes Slams Pair Of Homers

Nats Blow 6-to-1 Lead; Griffmen Make 5 Errors; Zuber in Relief

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Shibe Park, Philadelphia, April 23.—In confusion, punctuated by home runs, Ken Chase evacuated a 6-1 lead this afternoon, and the Nats slunk out of the premises, beaten 11 to 7. They were licked when the Athletics dragged a nine-run punch up from the floor in the sixth inning and knocked Chase loose from the ball game.

Trailing by five runs entering the sixth, the A's staged their biggest inning since the historic ten-run splurge against the Cubs in the World Series of 1929. Hero of the proceedings was Catcher Frank Hayes, who went to bat with the bases full and transformed the A's two-run deficit at that point into a two-run lead.

Before the roof crashed in on him, Chase was pitching five-hit ball and had yielded the A's only one run, and that one was error tainted. But in the sixth the Nats' left-hander collided with misery. Thirteen A's went to bat in the inning, seven of them hit safely, two of them hit home runs, three of them walked, one scored on a wild pitch, and before the inning was over Manager Bucky Harris was getting his first glimpse of Bill Zuber in a Washington uniform.

Chapman Homers

Siebert grounded out, but Sam Chapman slapped a home run into the left field stands to cut the Nats' lead to 6 to 2. Pete Suder doubled, Fred Chapman flied out and Pinch Hitter Crash Davis scored Suder with a single off Travis' glove. Eddie Collins, jr., singled to right and Davis scored from second on a wild pitch. McCoy walked, and so did Johnson, to fill the bases, and that was where Hayes walked onto the scene.

Four luscious Philadelphia runs followed the echo of Hayes' first swing. He socked a Chase pitch entirely out of the park, over the left-field roof, to put the Athletics out in front, 8 to 6. But Harris was bearing with Chase. He remained in the box long enough to walk Siebert and pitch a single to Sam Chapman before he retired in favor of Zuber.

Zuber's introduction to a Washington uniform was not exactly brilliant. The big right-hander who arrived only this morning from Cleveland, pitched a triple to Suder as his first chore on the Washington pay roll, and the eighth and ninth runs of the inning scored.

Carrasquel Summoned

Alex Carrasquel was rushed into the proceedings in the eighth and he served up the A's last run. It was very simply done. Hayes simply hit his second homer of the day over the same left field roof.

The Nats had no serious reply to all this late-inning damage. A rookie named Tom Ferrick, out of semipro ranks, held them to three hits and one run in the last three innings.

Five Washington errors, three of them by Buddy Lewis, played no important part in the affair. They figured in only one Philadelphia run.

The Nats drove Nelson Potter out of the box in five innings, while piling up a seemingly safe 6-1 lead. They got two runs at the start after Case beat out a bunt and Potter

Ty Cobb Accepts Babe Ruth Golf Challenge

British War Relief To Benefit; Date Will Be in June

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, April 23.—Tyrus Raymond Cobb accepted a challenge today to meet his old baseball rival, Babe Ruth, in a golf match over any distance and on any course. It will be a benefit for British war relief.

Cobb started practice at once on the Lakeside course.

"Iron shots dead to the pin and plenty of one-putt greens" mused Ty. "That will make the big fellow squeal.

"The Babe can knock out all those long shots from the tee he is noted for but they won't get me to pressing.

"Any course the committee selects will be O. K. with me. The match can be over 18 or 36 holes, more if desired. I'd like the date set for the middle of June or thereabouts.

"I hope the course is good and tight, narrow fairways and greens that require accurate shooting. I can hear the Babe bellering in the woods now. If we set the date for some time in June it will give my opponent plenty of time to get ready. I want my friendly enemy to be right for this one."

Hoyas Easily Defeat Rivals In New Sport

Winners All Near Par as Intracity Rivals Inaugurate New Competition

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Georgetown and George Washington, bitter intra-city athletic rivals for half a century, met on the golf course in an officially sponsored match for the first time yesterday at Bannockburn Club and it was Georgetown all the way, 9-0.

The Hoyas, defending Eastern Intercollegiate League champions and favorites again this year, won every point before the 17th hole and five of the matches were ended on or before they reached the 14th green. The inexperienced G. W. squad caught the winners on a good day, however, as every man on the winning team was within a stroke or two of par as the matches ended. It was the first loss in three matches for the Colonials, who had brushed aside Boston College and Western Maryland, while the Hoyas added G. W. to Penn and Navy, previous victims.

Jack Donohue, the Midwestern youngster who was runner-up in the District amateur last year, played in the top spot for Georgetown and missed winning every hole from Bus Fleming only when the latter chipped in from off the green for a birdie on the tenth hole to halve Donohue's regulation birdie four and lost, 9 and 8. Donohue was one under par for the ten holes, with a double-bogey six on the seventh.

Betsch Paces G. W. Outfit

The District youngsters on the G. U. team, Buddy Sharkey and Dick Meyer, turned in impressive victories. Sharkey, the Indian Spring shotmaker, was wild off the tee, but was only two over regulation figures as he turned Carl Betsch in, 3 and 2, while Dick Meyer, the Manor Club champion, played par golf for 11 holes in trouncing Vic Torrou, 8 and 7. John Smith, Meyer's partner, defeated Jack Kleh, local publinks player, 7 and 5, aided by an out nine of 34.

G. W. Quarterback Tom Grady and Roy Dillon held the Hoyas to closer scores in the second foursome, but they lost all three points. Bill Rohrey beat Grady, 3 and 2, while Dick Harris posted a 4-and-3 margin over Dillon.

Donohue and Sharkey were easy best-ball victors, 8 and 7, while Rohrey and Harris paired for a 4 and 3 triumph and Smith and Meyer, five under par between them for 11 holes, trounced Kleh and Torrou, 8 and 7.

Meyer and Donohue completed their rounds and finished with 71 and 70 respectively. Best golf of the G. W. team was by Carl Betsch, who stayed one or two holes behind Sharkey for 15 holes before the latter's 7-foot putt for a par clinched the issue on the sixteenth green. Betsch was in the middle 70s.

Georgetown's next matches will be Eastern League encounters with Pennsylvania and Princeton next weekend, May 2 and 3, at Manor Country Club.

Jack Donohue defeated Bus Fleming, 9 and 8; Buddy Sharkey defeated Carl Betsch, 3 and 2. Best ball, Georgetown, 7 and 5.

Bill Rohrey defeated Tom Grady, 3 and 2; Dick Harris defeated Roy Dillon, 4 and 3. Best ball, Georgetown, 3 and 2.

Dick Meyer defeated Vic Torrou, 8 and 7; John Smith defeated Jack Kleh, 7 and 5. Best ball, Georgetown, 8 and 7.

Terror Golfers Lost, Then Lose to Terps

Western Maryland's golf team turned up at Congressional instead of Beaver Dam for its match with Maryland yesterday, and when it finally arrived in Landover lost, 8½ to ½.

It was a bad day for the Terrors. A slight breakdown to one of the cars preceded going to the wrong club, which left them some 18 miles out of the way. When they finally arrived, some two hours late, they won only a half point.

The lone dent made by the Terrors in the scoring column was in unusual fashion. Although both Preston and Eckinrode lost individual matches to Leibman and Cook, respectively, in the second foursome, they halved the best ball point.

Murphy defeated Hausler, 2 up; Holmes defeated Holloway, 5 and 3. Best ball, Maryland, 4 and 2.

Leibman defeated Preston, 1 up; Cook defeated Eckinrode, 5 and 4. Best ball, even.

Harmon defeated Lavin, 4 and 3; Hodgins defeated Hudson, 3 and 1. Best ball, Maryland, 4 and 2.

Hurt's Relief Hurling Wins For Navy Nine

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., April 23.—Big Phil Hurt hurled spectacular relief ball here today as the Naval Academy baseball team defeated West Virginia University, 10 to 5.

After the Middies had gotten off to a 4 to 0 lead the visitors kept plugging away and finally went ahead at 5 to 4 in the sixth. Navy came back with three runs in the same frame, and tallied as many more in the next two innings.

Navy scored 10 runs on 10 hits, making its blows off Vic Kronosky count up to the limit.

Kronosky, who hurled the full route for the Mountaineers, received poor support in the first frame as the Midshipmen scored four runs on a pair of hits. Errors at first and center field, a pair of walks, Ernest Smith's long single with the bases full, and Wes Gebert's double netted the runs.

Charles Hockenberry hit for the circuit in the third with Carlos Rodriguez on base. Hockenberry walked in the fifth and stole second from where he scored on Ben Blue's wild throw to first. With the score tied Pitcher Krenosky tripled in the sixth and tallied as Rodriguez hit safely.

Navy regained the lead and sewed up the game in the sixth. Gebert started the frame by reaching second as Napolino threw wild to first. Lavrakas walked, Stowe poked a line single to left scoring Gebert with the tying run, Blue also singled filling the bases. At this point Krenosky lost control momentarily, walking Jack Brennan to force Lavrakas home. Stowe raced home as Werner grounded out.

Princeton, N. J., April 23.—Collecting a home run and three triples in a total of fifteen hits, Princeton's varsity baseball team routed Army 13-3 on University Field this afternoon. Roy Talcott, Bengal sophomore, allowed only one hit and no runs in the first six innings, but relief pitcher Bud Palmer allowed a double, a triple and three bases on balls to give Army all three runs in a late ninth inning rally.

U. of Rutgers Nine Defeats Maryland, 10-8

Rutgers University romped to 10-8 win over the Terrapins of the University of Maryland at College Park yesterday to take their first victory since coming south.

Although the Old Liners outhit the Rutgers nine, 16 to 15, five Terp errors, combined with eight walks given up by the Old Liners' hurlers, helped the Rutgers crew to win. After each team scored a tally in the second frame, the Terrapins rapped out four doubles by McDonald, Whipp, Maisel, and England aided by three Rutgers errors to score five runs.

After the Rutgers nine added a tally in the fourth on singles by Broer and Perkins sent Varju, Rutgers first sacker, over for the second New England run. Rutgers scored 4 in the sixth.

Rutgers put the game on ice in the seventh inning and at the same time drove Maryland's starting hurler to the showers. Smith and Fulton handled the Terp twirling the rest of the game. Singles by Harroth, Kuhn and Traindifilou mixed with two walks added the winning runs for Rutgers nine in this frame.

Bell, Hooker Take Bowling Lead Here

Joseph Bell and Phillip Hooker were new singles leaders at the end of the second night's rolling in the thirty-first annual Washington City Duckpin Association tournament last night at Lucky Strike Alleys.

Bell, representing the Federal Communications League, posted a 361 set in Class C while Hooker came through with a 345 count in Class F. The latter bowls in the Soil Conservation Service League.

Ned Warren, manager of the Del Ray Alleys, started with a 142 game and finished with a 368 set, second high in Class B.

A new Class C leader among the teams was the Windsor Shop, of the Rhode Island Avenue League, with a 1,690 count. Al Goucher's 368 set was the top effort as Bottle Drivers, of the Heurich League, went into the Class D lead. Plainsmen took the Class E lead with 1,568, aided by Joe Yocum's 371 set.

NORTHEAST TEMPLE

Jim Hawes, Camden Tavern, took the high game honors with 160 in the Temple Minor meet at Ollie Pacini's Northeast Temple but Freddy Waple gained the greater glory, for his 407 set enabled his McKee Pontiac boys to win team highs with 611 and 1,741 and score a sweep over Kavakos Grill as well. The I. C. E. Club and Standard Brands also won all three from opponents.

ICE PALACE

Otts Thall, H. B. Leary Bros., was top singles man in the Washington Automotive loop with 173 while Dave Burton, Capital Cadillac, also found the Ice Palace drives to his liking, for he connected for a 406 set. The Emerson & Orme No. 1 quintet was the hottest on the alleys, for the boys had high single of 595 and a 1,690 set that helped take all three games from Arcade Pontiac and leave the latter but one game in front of the others. Capital Cadillac scored a sweep over Logan Motors.

GEORGETOWN

The Georgetown Commercial League found that Ernie Dinsmore, General Oil Burner, and Jim Cavanaugh, Old Home Cafe, were the best pinmen, for the former led with high single of 158 while the latter came through with top set of 394. The C. B. Long team won high game after a 615 pinfall while Hillows won the set with 1,748 pins. Hillows won two and Thompson Welding three and now they are tied for leadership with 64-26 each.

Maryland Hunt Folk Get Set For Annual Cup Race Saturday

48th Running of Premier Cross-Country Classic to Draw 20,000 Spectators

By the Associated Press

Glyndon, Md., April 23.—Patrician and proletarian alike polished riding boots and dusted off tweeds and plaids today in readiness for America's premier cross-country classic—the Maryland Hunt Cup.

The forty-eighth running of the Nation's oldest steeplechase will be over J. W. Y. Martin's Worthington Valley estate here Saturday afternoon and swank hunt rooms already are echoing with tales of Billy Bartoon, Captain Kettle and other favorites of former years.

The hunt produces society's horsiest crowds.

But also it's a silent tribute to amateur sport, done up in true gilt-edge social atmosphere and dished out gratis to the 20,000 and more plain folk, as well as rich, who flock out here each April.

There's no cash to the winner of the tough 4-mile grind over 22 hazardous jumps. The hunt committee just bought a new cup and gentleman riders (jockeys to you) would rather bring the big gold vase home for the mantle piece than a saddle bag full of greenbacks.

They say these horses even whinny with an accent, though it's a right they've fully earned, for no flat racer goes through the long training the jumpers receive.

His 3-year-old stablemate may be primping for the Kentucky Derby or Preakness riches, before your jumper takes his first timber. At five he goes along on a fox hunt and tries two or three easy fences.

C. E. Tuttle's Blockade, sturdy 12-year-old son of gallant old Man o' War, is a prime example of horseflesh perfection at an age when flat racers are quietly munching oats in retirement.

Owned last year by Mrs. E. Read Beard, Blockade retired the massive challenge cup with his third straight victory. The big gelding went lame two weeks ago, and may not start Saturday, but a dozen or more others of the blueblood timber stock will be out there running for glory and a cup big enough for a watering trough.

Wyatt Blanks Phillies for Dodgers; Pete Reiser Injured

Pitch Knocks Outfielder Unconscious

Wyatt Hurls 4-to-0 Game; X-Ray Shows Rookie Suffers Bad Cheek Bruise

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, April 23.—The Brooklyn Dodgers, who seem to get hit on the head more often than any other players in baseball, lost young Pete Reiser today when a pitch struck him on the right cheek, but they won their ball game from the Phillies, 4 to 0, on the four-hit hurling of Whitlow Wyatt.

Brooklyn's slugging rookie center fielder was knocked unconscious while batting in the third inning and was rushed to a hospital, but X-rays showed his only injury was a bad bruise on his right cheek. The club expected he would be out of the lineup for a week or ten days.

He Was Really Hit

The pitch that knocked Reiser down was a fast one thrown so hard the stitches of the ball showed on the player's cheek and the crack of it hitting could be heard in the pressbox up under the roof of Ebbets Field.

At first it was believed the ball had hit Reiser on top the head. The Dodgers all wear protective headgear as the result of three of their players, Joe Medwick, Peewee Reese and Hugh Casey, getting beaned last year.

However, they haven't helped the Dodgers much so far. Only last Sunday Alex Kampouris was hit on the back of the head, where he had no padding, while running from first to second base, but he was able to continue play. The ball in that case was thrown by First Baseman Babe Young of the Giants.

Wyatt in Form

Except for Reiser's injury, the Dodgers were never in trouble today. Wyatt never gave two hits in the same inning and his teammates gave him a margin in the first frame by scoring two runs on three hits and an error. They added two more in the sixth on Joe Medwick's double. Cookie Lavagetto's triple and a single by Mickey Owen.

Nahem Stars On Mound As Cards Win

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, April 23.—Sam Nahem, bespectacled lawyer-pitcher who came to the Cardinals in the Joe Medwick deal, turned in the Redbirds' best hurling performance of the season today in holding the Pittsburgh Pirates to three scattered hits for a 3-to-1 victory.

The lone Pirate tally was unearned, crossed the plate in the eighth inning on errors by Martin Marion and Harry Walker.

Making his first start for the Cards, Nahem, who holds a law degree, wasted no time or effort and issued only one base on balls. The Cards gave him a one-run lead in the first inning and made it safe in the seventh.

Enos Slaughter, who drove in the winning run yesterday, drove in two today and Johnny Mize one.

U. of Chicago Only to Play 6-Man Football

By the Associated Press

Chicago, April 23.—The University of Chicago will be represented on the gridiron next season only by a six-man football team.

Athletic Director Nelson Metcalf made this clear today in answer to rumors that the university had planned an abbreviated schedule of games with a regulation team.

Metcalf said the university had a "number of requests from other educational institutions for the booking of informal 11-man games," and added:

"The university gave consideration to the possibility of such games this fall in acknowledging these requests. The university decided that no such games will be scheduled."

Chicago abandoned football as an intercollegiate sport in December, 1939. Six-man football made its appearance on the campus last fall.

Metcalf said the six-man game would be played again this fall and that he was "interested in arranging a schedule" for the team.

mishandled Cramer's sacrifice. Buddy Lewis' single and Travis' long fly got the runs home.

Archie Gets First Homer

Completely wasted was the item of George Archie's first big league home run. That occurred in the fourth inning after Travis had beaten out an infield hit. It was a beauteous blast into left-center stands by the rookie first baseman and lifted the Nats' lead to 4-1 at that point.

In the fifth, the Nats came up with two more runs against Potter. Lewis doubled against the right-center wall and Travis drew a walk. Lewis scored when Suder muffed Bloodworth's grounder, and Travis scored on Archie's single to left.

Matters were going along beautifully for the Nats at that point. How were they to know that nine big Philadelphia runs were just around the corner?

Indians Defeat Browns Behind Feller, 5 to 2

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, April 23.—The Cleveland Indians produced a four-run inning for Bob Feller today, and the Iowa fireballer came through with an eight-hit, 5-to-2 triumph over the St. Louis Browns for his second win in three starts.

Three runs was the biggest stanza for the light-hitting Tribesmen in their seven previous starts, but the quartet of runs which was scored in a batting rally against Johnny Niggeling gave the Indians an even break in the rain-abbreviated, two-game series.

The fat inning was pegged on doubles by Ray Mack and Rollie Hemsley, singles by Russ Peters and Roy Weatherly, followed by Gerald Walker's triple. It was Walker's third extra-base blow of the day, coming after a triple and a double.

Giants Rally In 6th to Beat Bees, 5 to 4

By the Associated Press

Boston, April 23.—The New York Giants kept a tight grip on the National League lead today by rallying for four runs in the sixth inning and beating the Boston Bees 5 to 4.

Richard Merriwell Errickson held the Giants in check without a score for the first four frames, but in the fifth they got to him for a run on Joe Moore's single and Billy Jurges' double. Then in the next inning the tide washed in.

Johnny Rucker singled and went to second on an infield out. Harry Danning doubled him home. Mel Ott walked. Moore singled for one run and Joe Orengo singled for two before Errickson was removed. The Bees had to use four other pitchers, but were not scored on again.

Tigers Pound Chisox Rookies To Win, 13-5

By the Associated Press

Detroit, April 23.—The Chicago White Sox tried out new pitching talent today and the champion Detroit Tigers, storming out of a hitting slump, hammered the ball for a 13-to-5 victory, their second triumph in six games.

Six Tigers crossed the plate in the fourth inning against young Jack Hallett, 6-foot-4-inch right-hander from Shreveport, and Orval Grove, Oklahoma City rookie. Pinky Higgins climaxed a parade of five hits and two walks with a bases-full triple off Grove.

Hal Newhouser, pitching for Detroit, gave the Sox eight hits. Six walks kept him in trouble, four of the men he passed ultimately scoring. The Tigers, collecting 14 hits, ganged up on Johnny Humphries, former Cleveland twirler, for four runs in the sixth.

RILEY SMITH

Former Redskin Back To Succeed Tex Tilson, Who Resigned

By the Associated Press

Lexington, Va., April 23.—Riley Smith, 29, former Alabama all-American and for two years backfield assistant on the Washington and Lee Coaching staff, was named head football coach at W. and L. today to succeed Warren E. (Tex) Tilson, resigned. Terms of Smith's contract were not announced. Dr. Livingston W. Smith, chairman of the committee on intercollegiate athletics, announced the appointment.

Tilson submitted his resignation yesterday, one year prior to the expiration of a two-year contract, and said the action was taken with "absolutely no duress or pressure from anyone connected with the university." He added, however, that "I believe the alumni, students and faculty will give more support to the football team with another man in charge."

Recommended Appointment

Tilson recommended the appointment of Smith to the committee, stating that his aide had been an "exceptionally loyal and capable assistant" and was a "student of football, a splendid teacher, and is loved by the boys."

"I've been very happy during my two years at Washington and Lee as an assistant to Tex Tilson," Smith said when notified of the appointment, "and I feel that the experience I gained will help me in executing the duties with which the athletic committee has honored me.

"I appreciate very much Tex Wilson having recommended me and am delighted to remain at W. & L."

Head Coach Since 1933

Tilson, an alumnus of the Washington and Lee Law School and former assistant coach at Duke, had been head coach at W. & L. since 1933. His 1934 team won the Southern Conference championhip. Three of his grid clubs won State titles and another tied for State honors, bu in recent years W. & L. has recorded few major football victories.

After a particularly lean season two years ago alumni rumblings were heard and some alumni clubs passed resolutions asking a coaching shake-up. These quieted down, however, when Tilson was given a new contract and Smith added to the staff.

Tilson's team last year won two games in 10 starts.

You may not want to hold the world on your shoulders like Atlas . . . or pose as a lifeguard but if you have shoulders on the round side, they tend to give you a rather dejected look.

The jacket of your suit has a man-size job to do . . . and it can't be done entirely by shoulder padding. If you're not built for wide shoulders, too generous padding will make you look ridiculous. Little details like a lower set collar, raised shoulder seams that straighten the line . . . and the widest and highest cut lapel that fashion has to offer will compensate for your sloping shoulders.

C. S. Howard's Chiquita Mia Wins $2,500 Aberdeen Stakes

Benshaba Is Beaten by Nose Margin

Equipet Runs Third; Time Is 0:54 for 4½ Furlongs; Crowd Makes Filly Choice

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Havre de Grace, Md., April 23.—Call it luck if you will, or good judgment or superb training, but the red and white of the C. S. Howard Stable continues to dominate racing at this meeting. Trainer Tom Smith waved his magic wand over Chiquita Mia, a big filly from the West Coast, today and she lasted by the skin of her nose to win the twenty-ninth running of the $2,500 added Aberdeen Stakes. Charging through the stretch and up on the leading filly in a manner that seemed to spell victory in capital letters, Mrs. R. D. Patterson's Benshaba lacked not more than 2 inches of making it a dead heat.

Four lengths behind the battle for first money came Breckinridge Long's Equipet to be third in the field of seven going the 4½ furlongs. The winner's time was 0:54 on the result board but private clockers had figures from 0:53 2-5 to 0:53 4-5. The winner was the favorite with the crowd of 9,000 and paid a $3.80 mutuel.

Howard Scores With Three

The C. S. Howard Stable has sent only three horses to the post here and each has been returned the winner. Porter's Cap clinched a place in the Kentucky Derby field by defeating Little Beans and others, and Handy Justice, making the first start of his career, also scored.

This was Chiquita Mia's fourth straight victory and her first appearance in the East. She won, but the hero of the race was the second horse. Jockey Sterling Young could not get the son of Islam out of a tangle in the early stages, but he got him clear in the stretch and put him to a drive that failed only because the race was not a half-length farther.

The favorite players were off on the wrong foot as the program began. Tanganyika, made the public choice, broke down in the running and Mrs. Emil Denemark's Slavic jogged off with first honors to bring her backers a $8.80 mutuel. Tramp Ship was second and Tyr third. The test was at a mile and a quarter.

A paddock good thing failed in the second race and Maecloud proved the winner. Jockey Rocco Sisto, who rode Slavic, also piloted Maecloud. This winner paid $5.90 and put the finishing touches on a $25 daily double. Abbasside was second and Total Eclipse, the big whisper horse, was third.

Canter's Best, a $43.90 shot, surprised the customers in the third race, leading most of the way. Brooklandville was second and Saxon Prince was third. Jockies Dupps and Duncan were fined $25 each for rough riding that marked the early stages of this event.

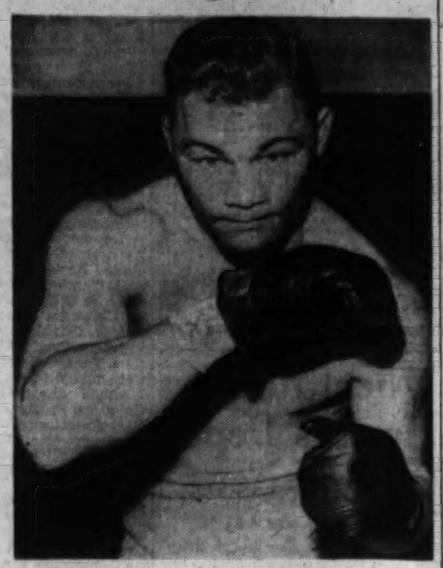
Mamakos to Workout Today for Vigh Bout



Ernie Vigh, hard-hitting contender for the world's middleweight boxing crown, who will meet Washington's Steve Mamakos next Wednesday night at Uline Arena. The bout is scheduled for 10 rounds

Washington's Middleweight to Engage Hard-Hitting Foe Next Wednesday Night

Rough, tough Steve Mamakos, Washington's own outstanding contender for the world's middleweight boxing championship who faces hard-hitting Ernie Vigh over a scheduled 10-round route at Uline's Arena next Wednesday night, works out in public at the National Guard Armory, Sixth and Pennsylvania Avenue northwest, this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

The popular Greek warrior, who recently lost a claim to the world's title when the bell saved Tony Zale in the fifth round of their championship bout in Chicago, will step the equivalent of 12 rounds while boxing two rounds each with El Brookman, Roy Dunne and another partner to be named.

Mamakos, eager to show Washingtonians the left hook which he has employed to such advantage in bouts with Milt Aron and Zale in Chicago since last appearing here, last night declared that he would pull no punches in today's workout and will be out to prove conclusively to Washingtonians that increased weight has helped him acquire punching power missing in his previous starts here.

Aims for Knockout

Mamakos last night insisted he would be gambling for a knockout of Vigh, one of the greatest punchers the middleweight division has turned out since the original Tiger Flowers and certainly the hardest hitting middleweight ever introduced here.

Mamakos, who weighed around 147 pounds while boxing as a legitimate welterweight in previous starts locally, will be making his hometown debut as a middleweight next Wednesday night. Mamakos qualified for the first flight of middleweights when he boxed Milt Aron to a draw in Chicago last fall. He followed up with a decisive victory over Aron; lost a split decision to Zale in a nontitle bout, and finally was knocked out in the thirteenth round of a championship bout with Zale before a $49,000 house in the Chicago Stadium after the bell had saved Zale in the fifth round.

Has Great Record

Ernie Vigh, who is scheduled to report here tomorrow, has one of the greatest records of any middleweight of recent years. The Newburg, N. Y., nemesis, a 21-year-old youth of Hungarian ancestry, has knocked out 37 of the 55 men he has faced. Otherwise he has won 11 decisions, boxed one draw and lost but six bouts, all on decision.

Vigh claimed the Nation's spotlight in 1938 and through the greater part of 1939 when he swept 25 consecutive bouts, 17 of these on knockouts. Ten of these knockouts were scored in the first round.

Patty Berg Due Here Today for Golf Visit

Patty Berg, the nation's best-known woman golf professional, is expected in town sometime today, well in advance of a Sunday exhibition date at Kenwood County Club. The young red-head from Minneapolis, who quit the amateur ranks after sweeping the major titles, will spend a week with Helen Dettweiler, the District's gift to the feminine pros.

PATTY BERG

Patty and Helen are scheduled for an exhibition match Sunday at Kenwood with Roger Peacock and Ralph Bogart, the local amateur aces. Pairings for the match, sponsored by the District Women's Golf Association, will be announced later.

Miss Berg and Miss Dettweiler will remain here through next Thursday, and have an exhibition date next Wednesday, April 30, at East Potomac with Tommy Doerer, Jr., and Cliff Spencer.

Patty has been playing exhibition matches in Alabama and when she and Helen leave here next Friday for Baltimore they will head north for a series of British War Relief matches. Helen has been in town since Monday, and played several holes yesterday at Manor with Mrs. L. G. Pray and Mrs. W. R. Stokes.

Episcopal Netmen Shutout Central, 9-0

Episcopal High School's tennis team blanked Central, 9-0, yesterday on the Alexandria courts. All matches were decided in straight sets.

Weems defeated Gibbons, 6—3, 6—3; Gamble defeated Sisler, 6—0, 6—0; Sackett defeated Crowell, 6—1, 6—2; Grimball defeated Gaberman, 6—4, 6—4; Lord defeated Gwin, 6—1, 6—0; Randall defeated Warren, 6—1, 6—1.

Weems and Sackett defeated Gibbons and Sisler, 6—1, 6—1; Gamble and Harrison defeated Crowell and Gaberman, 6—1, 6—3; Lord and Randall defeated Gwin and Warren, 6—2, 6—2.

Buddy Scott To Engage Hogan Here

Two of the four eight-round bouts on Monday's all-star boxing show at Turner's Arena were closed out yesterday.

One eight will be between Buddy Scott, the Oklahoma heavyweight, now back in Washington, and Irish Johnny Hogan, of New Haven.

The other eight will be between Al Gilbert, claimant of the Southern light-heavyweight championship, and Irish Billy Colbert, the Houston schoolboy sensation, who recently was taken over by Sam (the Mumbler) Sobel, well-known handler of fighters.

Matchmaker Gabe Menendez, now recovering from illness, announced that he would secure opponents today for Wild Bill McDowell, the crowd-pleasing Texan, and Henry Hook, the Hoosier Hurricane.

It will be Scott's first start here in more than a year. Buddy now weighs 192 pounds, and hopes to use a victory over Hogan as a stepping stone to a big outdoor match. Hogan comes here with a fine New England record.

Gilbert and Colbert have displayed great form in daily workouts at Huron gym, and Matchmaker Menendez expects a rousing scrap in this eight.

Promoter Turner stated that he is still awaiting the signed contract of Joey Archibald, former world's featherweight champion, that he might proceed with plans for the Archibald-Jeffra title bout at Griffith Stadium, May 12.

Variety Marks Wrestling Here Tonight

Elvira Snodgrass, a feminine hillbilly from Smoky Mountain, Tenn., will engage Gladys Gilliam, the blonde Birmingham Tigress, in one headline bout.

The other co-feature will find the Green Hornet, hooded grappler, facing Lou Plummer, the Baltimore madman.

Elvira's brother, Elmer, also is on the card. This big whistlin', tobacco-chawin' mountaineer will trade blows and grunts with Chief White Feather, the veteran Indian matman.

Indications are that the winner of the match between Elvira and Gladys will meet Mildred Burke, the feminine champion, within the next few weeks at the Arena.

Hans Kampfer, former European titleholder, will return to the Arena after a year's absence to engage Warren (Flash) Bockwinkle, of St. Louis, in the semiwindup. Henry Kulkovich, of New York, will face Fred (Legs) Grobmier in another 30-minute scrap.

First bout is at 8:30.

G. W. Nine Meets Terrors; Maryland Plays W. Virginia

George Washington University's baseball team will graduate to Griffith Stadium for a game with Western Maryland today while Maryland will stick to its home field, where it has been losing with regularity, to meet West Virginia.

The Colonials will pitch Jack Redinger against the Green Terrors. Johnny Picco is the leading G. W. stickman to date, with a .313 mark. Game time is 2:30.

The Terp-Mountaineer clash is listed for 4 o'clock, at College Park. Georgetown entertains West Virginia tomorrow on the Medical School diamond.

Burial with military honors will be at Arlington Cemetery.

Born in Kensington, Md., he lived in that community all his life. At the time of his death he was president of the Kensington Armory Board. He organized and served as head of the American Legion Orthopedic Clinic in Montgomery County for five years.

Besides his wife, Mrs. Mildred Duvall Smoot, he leaves a brother, George A. Smoot, of Chevy Chase, Md.; a half-brother, Arthur Erickson, of Washington, and a sister, Mrs. Bernard Donnelly, of California.

Contract Bridge

With fewer rules to guide him in the play of a hand than in the bidding, the true test of a skillful declarer is his resourcefulness in a tight contract. There are not many players who would have either the cleverness or the courage to try the desperate tactic accomplished by our hero of today's deal.

At a four-space contract, having lost three tricks on the first three leads, he realizes his only chance to win the contract is to establish one of dummy's long clubs. In order to do this he needs three entries; two he has in aces, and the third he finds in a daring trump finesse.

West leads the king of hearts, then a low heart, which East takes, laying down the king of clubs. A low club follows, which declarer ruffs, and now he makes the crucial play, leading a low spade and finessing dummy's eight. When the finesse succeeds, he ruffs a club, enters dummy again with the space ace, ruffs another club and draws the trump. The diamond ace then lets declarer in the North hand again to discard his losing diamond on the set-up club. South makes four spades with 100 honors, losing two hearts and a club.

An early shift of suits by the adversaries would have defeated the contract, but this is a difficult play to foresee with their holdings.

Rotary Club Elects Reeves Its President

REEVES

Algernon P. Reeves, proprietor of S. A. Reeves, Inc., confectionery at 1209 F Street Northwest, last night was elected president of the Rotary Club of Washington at the annual dinner meeting at the Willard Hotel. He succeeds Bert Nye, manager of the American Surety Co.

Robert L. O'Brien, former chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, principal speaker, said: "Unless we keep on extending aid to England she is going to go down."

O'Brien also asserted that this country's defense and aid effort posed graved questions for its future economic situation.

The former editor of the Boston Transcript and the Boston Herald, he cited the closing down of a number of New England newspapers as well as several large shipping lines to illustrate economic difficulties in that area.

The new vice president named was M. Z. Wilberding, consulting engineer, while the following were elected to the board of directors: Ralph Lee, jr., Llewellen D. Nicolson and Edward Costigan. A secretary and treasurer will be named at the board of directors' meeting July 1.

Personal Loans Of Banks Leap 40% in Year

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, April 23.—A rapidly expanding phase of banking monthly repayment loans to salaried borrowers—was the main subject of discussion today at the opening of the national consumers' credit conference of the American Bankers Association.

Kenton R. Gravens, vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co., Cleveland, and chairman of the association's consumer credit council, said that such personal loans by banks increased 40 per cent during 1940, with a total of $1,468,602,000 outstanding at the end of the year.

Installment loans against retail sales totaled $776,348,000, an increase of 43 per cent over the previous year, he said. Cash installment loans made directly to individuals for personal needs totaled $416,970,000, an increase of 34 per cent. FHA loans for modernization of homes amounted to $275,248,000.

Cravens estimated that banks now are handling between 33 1-3 and 40 per cent of installment loan paper outstanding.

Eastman Urges Transportation Agency by U. S.

Baltimore, April 23 (AP).—Establishment of a governmental agency, possibly a "Department of Transportation," to guide the Nation's "transportation system as a whole," was suggested today by Joseph B. Eastman, Interstate Commerce Commission chairman.

"There is need for constructive leadership, guidance and planning" of road, rail, air and waterway carriers, he told the American Society of Civil Engineers' convention.

Such an agency would "issue no orders," Eastman said, but would be a "planning and promotional body" divorced from "regulation of the kind which requires quasi-judicial procedure."

"Clearly there are certain things which each type of carrier can do better than any of the others, and the ideal system would be one which would utilize them all accordingly, empasizing cooperation and coordination and avoiding definitely wasteful uses, but at te same time retaining a very considerable element of competition."

Pennsylvania Oil Price Is Advanced

Pittsburgh, April 23 (AP).—Prices of Pennsylvania grade crude oil advanced 10 cents a barrel today, the second increase this year and the fourth since November, 1940.

The new quotations, announced by the Joseph Seep Purchasing Agency of the South Penn Oil Co., were:

Bradford-Alleghany $2.40 a barrel; Southwest Pennsylvania, $2.05, and Eureka, $1.89.

Improved demand from refineries was credited with causing the advance. Although prices now are 55 cents a barrel higher than in November, 1940, they are 35 cents lower than at this time a year ago.

Life Underwriters To Name Officers

A lively contest is expected tomorrow when members of the District of Columbia Life Underwriters Association meet to nominate officers and directors.

Among aspirants for the board of directors are Paul W. Hammack, who was recently elected president of the Life Insurance Club of Washington; Warren S. Stone, of New York Life; Charles B. Sinclair, of Equitable Assurance Society, and Joseph Silverman, of Metropolitan.

Speaker at the noon meeting in the Lee Sheraton Hotel will be John A. Witherspoon, vice president of the National Association of Life Underwriters.

William E. Johnson, jr., general agent for the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. in New Hampshire and Vermont, will be guest speaker at the managers' section of the Life Underwriters' Association today at the Lee Sheraton Hotel. Mr. Johnson's topic will be "This Opportunity of Ours."

Republic Aviation Shows First Profit

New York, April 23 (AP).—Republic Aviation Corporation, manufacturers of high-latitude pursuit aircraft, had in 1940 the first profitable year in its eight-year history, W. Wallace Kellett, president, said yesterday in an announcement after the regular meeting of the board of directors.

For the year ended December 31 last, net sales of airplanes and parts were $10,213,745, he said, producing earnings equal to 63 cents per share of common stock after reservations to cover all taxes and $100,000 to meet dividends on the convertible second preferred stock.

The company's backlog is in excess of $30,000,000, Kellett said.

General Electric Seeks More Subcontractors

Schenectady, N. Y., April 23 (AP).—The General Electric Co. is employing more than 300 concerns to manufacture defense products for which it is primary contractor, President Charles E. Wilson said today, and is seeking additional subcontractors.

"Many new factory buildings have been erected at our plants and both longer working hours and two or three shift operation are in effect, he asserted. "Still, the production program has called for, and will continue to call for, additional subcontracting in order to expedite deliveries."

General Electric has $500,000,000 in orders, 75 per cent for defense, and employs 105,000.

I. B. A. Head Urges Expansion Of Consumer Goods Industries

Says Resources Ample To Produce 'Both Guns and Butter'

By the Associated Press

New York, April 23.—The United States has enough unused productive capacity to provide "both guns and butter," Emmett F. Connely, president of the Investment Bankers Association of America, said today. He advocated immediate expansion of consumer goods industries as a check on "price spiraling" caused by the defense program.

"The $1,000,000,000 being spent monthly for defense is not only causing great demand for consumers goods as workers spend their wages more liberally, but will soon create a need for expansion of plants in feeder industries," Connely said at a meeting of the New York Kiwanis Club.

"Avoidance of a price spiral lies at the very foundation of our production policy. It must be avoided at all costs or it may stalemate production, rack our industrial system to pieces and create well-nigh insoluble problems to be faced after the war is over."

Asserting that expansion of consumer industries in an emergency seemingly contradicts the theory that essential industries should have first call on everything it needs, Connely said the steadiness of markets and the millions still unemployed provide evidence of "great unused capacity."

He suggested that many of the unemployed could be used in increased production of goods "for the civilian population."

United Light Plans To Sell Holdings In Detroit Edison

New York, April 25 (AP).—Management of the United Light & Power Co., a $500,000,000 utility holding company, was said today to be considering divestment of its 20.2 per cent interest in the Detroit Edison Co.

United, through the American Light & Traction Co., a subsidiary holding company, has 1,289,205 shares in the big Detroit utility, the investment valued at approximately $27,500,000 at current market prices.

William G. Woolfolk, president of United Light & Power, recently announced that the system intended to cooperate fully with the SEC in working out integration.

Detroit Edison, one of the richest individual integrated utility companies, serves all of Detroit and has broad outlets over adjacent territory. It derives about 96 per cent of its $60,000,000 gross annual revenues from electric operations and the remainder from steam, gas and water customers.

Rail Benefits Likely

The trend toward diversion of intercoastal freight from ship to rail lines has already gone a long way, and is likely to continue as additional ships are requisitioned for transatlantic service. Moreover, while held to be an extreme view, it is barely posible that the Panama Canal may ultimately be closed to commercial traffic for defense reasons. To demonstrate the effect on the railroads, if half of the 1940 traffic (26,000,000 tons) were diverted from intercoastal ships to railroad lines, with an average haul of 2,000 miles, the addition to traffic would be roughly 26,000,000,000 ton miles. At an average of one cent a mile, the resulting gross would be in the neighborhood of $260,000,000—equivalent to 15 per cent of total 1940 revenue of all railroads in the western district.

Advertising Up 5 Per Cent

Advertising expenditures for the first quarter of 1941 are unofficially estimated at about 5 per cent above those for the initial three months last year. Of the major branches, outdoor advertising is reported to have fared best, with an increase of about 10 per cent. Radio was fairly close behind, with billings some 8 per cent ahead of 1940, and newspapers and magazines tied for third place with gains of about 4 per cent each.

Gasoline Inventories

The statistical position of gasoline has been improving steadily for several months. Inventories on April 1 were some 3,500,000 barrels less than a year earlier, and the improvement was even greater if the improvement was even greater if the comparison is restricted to automobile grade fuel. The April 1 total included aviation gasoline in an amount nearly 2,000,000 barrels in excess of that on hand on April 1, 1940. Also, whether inventories are large or small depends principally upon demand, and with consumption of gasoline running about 10 per cent ahead of last year, stocks are automatically cut about that same amount in terms of days' supply.

Foreign Exchange

New York, April 23 (AP).—The Canadian dollar dipped ¼ cent in the foreign exchange market today to close at 88⅞ United States cents. The Hongkong dollar was a little lower, too. Other major currencies were unchanged. Closing rates follow (Great Britain in dollars, others in cents):

Official Canadian control board rates for United States dollars; buying 10 per cent premium, selling 11 per cent premium, equivalent to discounts on Canadian dollars in New York of buying 9.91 per cent, selling 9.09 per cent. Canadian dollar in New York open market 11⅛ per cent discount, or 88.43¾ U. S. cents.

Great Britain, official (bankers foreign exchange committee rates), buying $4.02, selling 14.04; open market, cables, $4.02½.

'Defense Shares' Stage Moderate Climb; Greek Defeat Casts Pall on Trading

New York, April 23.—Stock market sentiment swung to the buying side today for the first time in eight sessions, sending some leaders higher by more than a point.

Steels, rails, motors and aircrafts reaped the major benefits, indicating their recent sell-offs were considered to have placed them in a sound strategic position.

The Associated Press average of 60 selected stocks advanced .4 of a point to 39.5. Transactions totaled 474,500 shares, compared with 435,860 yesterday.

The apparent Allied defeat in Greece contributed a pall of pessimism to traders, who limited their dealings more sharply than might have been expected with the extent to the rise.

Moderate strength displayed by rails, and irregular rises by the steels, provided rallying points for the rest of the list through the first 4½ hours. Then other issues joined the rise and the close was the best level of the day.

Retail store shares were benefited by trade reports of increased sales and by a survey showing farmers to be in a buying mood.

By their rise, steels overrode evidence of production declines forced by the coal tie-ups. The rise of the "defense shares" was regarded as reflecting belief outputs would be speeded.

Market dealers noted efforts to forestall labor difficulties in the packing industry through wage increases and many saw in this action evidence of a probable decline in labor friction.

Chief among advancing shares were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Great Northern preferred, Atlantic Coast Line, General Motors, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, Douglas, United Aircraft, Sperry, Dupont, American Can, Anaconda and American Smelting.

Gainers in the curb, where 86,000 shares changed hands compared with 77,000 yesterday, included Jones & Laughlin, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, Pittsburgh Plate Glass and McWilliams Dredge.

Bonds were higher. Most commodities declined. At Chicago, wheat closed ½ cent to 1⅛ cents a bushel down and corn ¼ cent off to ⅛ up. Cotton ended the day 10 cents a bale lower to 15 cents higher.

Wheat Reaches Month's Depth On War News

By the Associated Press

Chicago, April 23.—Wheat prices fell more than a cent a bushel at one stage today to 88½ for May delivery and 86⅝ for July and September—lowest levels in almost a month.

Selling, although not on a large scale, was inspired principally by war news. Lagging domestic and export flour business and favorable winter wheat progress were other unsettling factors. Buying was held in check by uncertainty regarding the loan program for the new crop.

Some short covering and lifting of hedges against cash wheat business helped to rally prices but wheat closed ½ to 1⅛ cents lower than yesterday; May, 99⅞@89; July, 86¾@86⅞. Corn closed ¼ cent off to ⅛ cent up; May, 67¼@67⅜; July, 67¾. Oats, unchanged to ¼ cent down; soybeans, 2¾ to 4 cents lower; rye, 1⅜ to 2⅛ cents down, and lard 12 to 18 cents lower.

Cash wheat sold at 90¾ cents for No. 2 hard in the spot market, or 9¾ cents over the loan basis.

Corn dipped about ½ cent at times with wheat, but was steadied by reduced supplies. Oats steadied with corn despite ½ to 1 cent lower spot prices and shipping sales of 30,000 bushels. The sharp break in rye was attributed to profit taking, liquidation of May contracts and weakness of wheat.

Soybeans tumbled as much as 4 cents, due to profit-taking, and stop loss selling touched off by weakness of cottonseed oil, which also affected the lard market.

Week's Power Rate Again Declines

New York, April 23 (AP).—Electric Power production for the week ended April 19 declined further for the sixth consecutive week, but was well ahead of the corresponding period last year, the Edison Electric Institute reported today.

The week's output of $2,701,879,000 kilowatt hours was .7 of 1 per cent off from the previous week's 2,720,790,000 and 11.6 per cent above last year's 2,421,576,000.

The dip was against the seasonal trend and the Associated Press Index of power production declined to 137.7 from 139.0 the previous week. It was 122.5 a year. The index is based on 1929-30 production as 100.

Railroad Bonds Stage Another Sharp Upturn

New York, April 23 (AP).—Railroad bonds today scored the best average gain since March 8 in a strong follow-up movement to Tuesday's rise.

Other corporate issues trailed along at a leisurely pace and gains of small fractions outnumbered declines by a good mapority. U. S. Governments were first on one side and then the other, reflecting considerable switching from one maturity to another as Government experts studied proposals to overhaul the country's tax machinery, including suggestions that might importantly affect the income from tax exempt Government bonds.

Impressive gains in the railroad sector were mostly confined to the low-to-medium priced issues and included Boston & Maine 4½s at 28¼, Erie General Lien 4s at 32, Baltimore & Ohio convertibles of '60 at 28, Delaware Hudson refunding 4s at 53¾, Illinois Central 4¾s at 43¾, Southern Pacific 4½s of '81 at 52 and New York Central 5s at 63½. There were many others.

Ahead elsewhere were Western Union 5s, Portland General Electric 4½s, American Telephone 3¼s and Goodrich 4¼s. Walworth 4s and International Merchantile Marine 6s were among the losers.

Closing prices of Governments were not greatly changed from those of Tuesday, although at one time during the session a number of issues were off ⅛ to ¼ on average. Quotations on the longer term tax exempts were about unchanged over the counter and the new taxable 2½s were up a bit. Trading in Governments on the stock exchange was light and prices mixed at the end.

Foreign bonds directly affected by the day's war developments included Greek 6s, off 1⅞ at 8; Canada 3s, up 2⅞ at 85⅝, and German 5½s, up 1 at 11½.

Total sales of $9,849,600, par value, were the best since April 8 and compared with $6,806,800 the day before.

WHY ON EARTH DO THEY DO IT?

...play catch-as-catch-can with the insurable value of their property

A lot of people guess at the value of their property in buying insurance. Building costs change. Depreciation should be figured somewhere near right. Improvements may have been made. Insurance ought to fit like a glove . . . not like Mahatma Ghandi's sarong.

Moral: Have your insurance situation given the once-over by someone who knows. We'd like to do it without charge.

Youth Shoots Child Bride, Kills Himself

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, April 23.—A youthful husband early today critically wounded his child bride of two months then shot himself to death, Detective Sergt. John C. Curran reported.

He said the tragedy was a death pact agreed to by Benjamin Longo, 21, and Yolanda Goglia, 14, because the girl's parents, ignorant of their secret marriage February 27, refused to let her see him. A further complication was added to their situation when Longo lost his job last week.

The couple arranged their rendezvous in League Island Park. Yolanda disclosed the tragedy when she staggered out with a bullet wound just over the heart.

"My husband has been shot," she gasped after hailing an automobile which took her to a hospital.

About 250 yards up a shadowy side drive police found Longo's body, a .32 caliber pistol at his side. Death had been instantaneous from a bullet in the heart.

Retaining sufficient strength to answer questions, Yolanda told Curran her husband shot at her twice before turning the weapon on himself. Only one bullet wounded her, however. The detective said she had her marriage certificate with her.

When mothers of the young couple arrived at the hospital, neither knew the other's child was involved. Both collapsed.

Listen! with Glynn

About as widely varied a group of newspaper people as you could gather together and still only have six are to be guest contestants on the quiz show known as "Vox Pop," which you'll hear over WJSV and the Columbia network at 7:30 tonight.

One of them will be Gen. Hugh Johnson, known throughout the country for his hard-hitting column on current affairs. Another will be Beatrice Fairfax, famous for her "Advice to the Lovelorn," that having to do, of course, with eternal as well as current affairs. Then there'll be Arthur "Bugs" Baer, one of the most perennial of the Nation's syndicated humorists; Inez Robb, the satirical feature writer; Otto Soglow, creator of "the little king" cartoons, and Charles A. Smith, war reporter for King Features and International News Service, who has just returned from the European front.

The contestants, all of whom are pretty good to begin with, will be under the stimulus of proving that they're even better because they'll be being put through their mental paces under the eyes of all their bosses. For the broadcast is coming from the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York.

A well known motto for newspaper folk is "Get it first but first get it right" and if all of them follow its principles, it should be the first dead heat "Vox Pop" has ever had.

Charles Edward Russell Dies; Author and Famed 'Muckraker'

Charles Edward Russell, 80, noted author, newspaperman and crusader, died yesterday at his home, 2011 I Street Northwest.

Author of some 35 books on poetry, economics and biography, one of which won him a Pulitzer Prize in 1927, Russell had just completed another—a biography of his father, Edward Russell, the noted abolitionist.

Overwork was blamed for the illness which led to his death. He had been ill for about a month. The funeral will be held from Gawler's, 1756 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, Saturday.

Russell did not go unhonored for his many good works as a humanitarian. On the occasion of his eightieth birthday last September 26, he was given a testimonial dinner by the Inter-Racial Committee. Colored and white, Protestant, Catholic and Jew joined in paying him tributes which, in his own word, left him "overwhelmed."

Gifted "Muckraker"

In his four score of years, Russell fought for Irish freedom, for the Jews in Palestine, for the adjustment of colored people, for woman suffrage, for the abolition of capital punishment, and for a good many other causes.

"Besides the freedom of Ireland," he said a few years ago, "the only cause I've fought for that has actually won out is women's suffrage. But those other things will come in time."

He turned from a highly successful newspaper career in 1903 to join the "muckrakers," the coterie of journalists who for more than a decade exposed political, economic and social corruption wherever they could find it.

The others were Lincoln Steffens, Ida Tarbell, Henry Demarest Lloyd, Ray Stannard Baker, David Graham Phillips, Thomas W. Lawson and John L. Matthews. Whereas Steffens specialized in municipal corruption and Miss Tarbell in oil companies, Russell went after the big corporations. Steffens, in his biography, wrote of Russell:

"He was one of the most earnest, emotional, and gifted of the 'muckrakers.'"

Native of Iowa

He was born in Davenport, Iowa, September 25, 1860, the son of Edward Russell, crusading publisher of the Davenport Gazette. He was graduated from the St. Johnsbury (Vt.) Academy in 1881.

It was in 1880, while he was working as a cub on his father's paper, that Russell first became interested in Ireland. To Davenport had come Charles Stewart Parnell, the "uncrowned King of Ireland," to raise funds for the victims of Ireland's terrible potato famine, and also to plead the cause of Irish freedom.

"That was my first contact with Ireland and its problems," Russell told a Washington Post reporter three years ago. "In the years that followed I never lost interest."

Russell was covering Ireland at the time of the Easter Rebellion in 1916; he greeted Eamon de Valera when the Irish leader came to the United States after a breath-taking escape from prison; he was the only journalist to talk to De Valera in hiding in the dark days of '23. So earnestly did Russell fight for the Irish cause in the United States that when, in 1926, he tried to enter England, he was barred from landing at Plymouth.

Italy also barred him because of his written attacks on Mussolini.

Russell's newspaper career took him from the Davenport Gazette to the Minneapolis Tribune. He later became managing editor of the Minneapolis Evening Journal. After a brief period as managing editor of the Detroit Tribune, he joined the staff of the New York Commercial Advertiser. Next he served on the Times, World, and Herald. As a reporter on Bennett's Herald, he covered the great Johnstown Flood of 1889.

He was publisher of the two Hearst papers in Chicago, the American and the Examiner, when his health broke in 1902. A year later he entered the magazine field and started his career as a muckraker.

Russell became a Socialist in 1908, being one of the first of his group to make the transition from literary radicalism to political radicalism. He was the Socialist candidate for Governor of New York in 1910 and 1912, for Mayor of New York in 1913 and for United States Senator in 1914. He was nominated by his party for President of the United States in 1916, but refused to run.

A year later he was expelled from the party for advocating entry of the United States into the World War, which his party vigorously opposed. In 1936, however, when the party split into right and left wings, the rightists invited him to affiliate once more. He did so and became head of the right wing Socialist group in this city.

Friend of Wilson

He was a personal friend of President Woodrow Wilson. After his expulsion from the Socialist Party, he was appointed by Wilson to a diplomatic mission under Elihu Root which went to Russia after the overthrow of the Czar to pay this country's respects to Kerensky and other revolutionary leaders. In 1918 the President sent him to London as commissioner to Great Britain on the committee on public information. And in 1919 he was a member of the President's industrial commission.

Russell was married twice. His first wedding was in 1884 to Abby O. Rust of St. Johnsbury. They had a son, John Russell, a playwright and short story writer of Santa Monica, Calif. Mrs. Russell died in 1901 and in July, 1909, he married Theresa Hirschl of Chicago. They came to Washington to live about 25 years ago.

Russell is survived by his wife, his son, two sisters, Mrs. John N. Greer, of Minneapolis, and Mrs. Frederick Gammis, of Minneapolis, a granddaughter and a grandchild.

House Passes Domicile Bill For Prosecutor

In a move a member of each major party described as an attempt at "carpet-bagging," the House yesterday passed by a 146-to-137 vote a bill to permit the United States attorney for the District and members of his staff to reside within 20 miles of Washington.

The present law, in effect since 1919, requires the district attorney and his assistants to live within the city during their term of office. Three assistants to District Attorney Edward M. Curran live in suburban Virginia and Maryland.

The record vote was ordered after the House failed to reach a decision by voice and standing vote and following attacks on the measure by Representative John M. Robsion (Republican), of Kentucky, and Representative Francis E. Walter (Democrat), of Pennsylvania.

"If you want to open the door to carpet-bagging, approve this legislation," Walter challenged. He declared that the bill discriminated against District lawyers in favor of those from Maryland and Virginia.

Declaring that the bill would "establish the policy of carpet-bagging by the dominant party," Robsion asked if there are not sufficient "able and distinguished lawyers in the District who can fill these offices?"

Residents of the District, he said, pay more taxes than residents of a number of States, but "they do not have the right to vote" and "their rights are too much curtailed." He added that he would not "be party to taking away from them high office."

Robsion described the measure as "special" legislation aimed at permitting appointment from Maryland and Virginia of persons who have at the same time opportunities to run for public office.

Representative Charles F. McLaughlin (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, countered with the explanation that residents of any State may be appointed to the District Attorney's staff and that "therefore the charge of carpetbagging doesn't apply."

District law, he added, merely requires that the district attorney and assistants must move into the District when appointed. McLaughlin pointed out that the District is restricted in area and that many persons having business here reside in the suburbs.

Representative John H. Tolan (Democrat), California, chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, explained that the law, in general, requires district attorneys to live in the districts they serve, but that the bill has been approved by the Attorney General inasmuch as Washington is more congested than the southern district of New York which is the only area now excepted.

Speaker System Fails at Antiwar Rally

The loud-speaker system refused to function and the phonograph music was unrecognizable, but even this didn't daunt four members of the Washington Keep America Out of War Committee, who yesterday, staged their much-heralded rally—a "strike against war."

Representative Knute Hill (Democrat), of Washington, was scheduled to be the guest speaker, but due to a misunderstanding, he did not appear. Substituting was his secretary, Nelson Pierce, a former Methodist minister.

While a voice—which later proved to be that of Bing Crosby—sang "Ballad For Americans" from a much-used record, Nelson spoke in an uncompromising tone against the proposal to use American warships to convoy supplies to Britain.

While approximately 60 persons stood on the sidewalk of McPherson Square listening, Pierce declared that America's present position is that of a friendly nation and that the elements contributing to war in Europe will not come to this country "unless we permit them to come."
